FIREPLACE
LOG CART

Once upon a time, man carried firewood on his back, or dragged it behind his dinosaur. That didn't work so well so centuries later he used a canvas log carrier. But this was too much work, and very messy, scattering chips all over the floor. Then one day, a very lazy man had a very bright idea. He invented a little cart that not only called the logs into his house, but looked very smart by the fireplace too! Of sturdy black wrought iron, it's 30"H, 17"W, 14"D; with non mark tires, but holds over 100 lbs. of firewood. Postpaid. $17.95

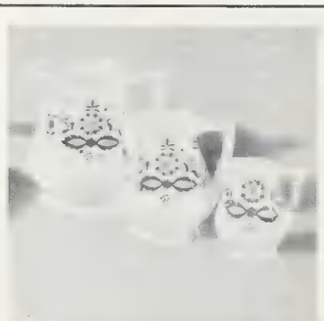
RECORDINGS

SOUNDS OF THE SEA, a seven inch hi-fi. On one side we walk along the shore listening to the gulls and the surf, on the other we sail out of Newport on a foggy morning listening to the whistles & bells.

THE SEA AT CASTLE HILL is a 12" mono LP for those who love the sound of surf on rocks and sandy beaches. Above it rings a lighthouse bell, and a few gulls cry — nothing more. On Side B we take a trip up the Hudson on the ALEXANDER HAMILTON, an old side-wheeler. Beautiful whistles.



BIRDS ON A MAY MORNING is another 12" giving on Side A thirty-six bird songs just as you would hear them in the East in Spring. A narration identifies the birds. On Side B the same songs are given without the talk. Designed for simple listening enjoyment, it can also be used as an aid in identifying birds.

"Our G-E Heat Pump Costs just $8 more a month in electricity to heat and cool"

Mr. Alex Silverman, in the Los Angeles area, replaced his forced-air furnace with a General Electric WEATHERTRON Heat Pump. Now he enjoys economical air conditioning, as well.

"I attended Home Shows for several years," says Mr. Silverman, "and found that the G-E Weathertron Heat Pump was best for our needs. It's clean and dry, efficient and dependable. And after talking to our G-E dealer, I knew he could give us the exact installation we wanted." The Silvermans' home has 1,200 square feet of living area, including three bedrooms.

"Before we put in our 2-ton G-E heat pump," Mr. Silverman adds, "our electric bills ran about $10 a month. Since then, the highest bill has been about $17.50. That's under $8 a month for year-round comfort."

"In the sweltering days of summer, I do my ironing in a nice, comfortable seventy-two degrees," Mrs. Silverman notes. "And there's a lot of ironing with three children. Sometimes three loads a day in my washer."

"I'm a hi-fi buff," Mr. Silverman adds. "With our heat pump, we can keep our house closed-up, so outside noises don't interfere. I also find that the filtering system we have gives me relief from my bronchial asthma."

"Our home stays cleaner, too," Mrs. Silverman points out, in their daughters' spotless bedroom. And my husband has tested himself that there is no more than a 3° variation of temperature from room to room."

If you've always thought a heat pump is expensive to own and operate, get the facts about the General Electric Weathertron. Call your G-E dealer for a free survey and installation estimate. He'll tell you, too, how you can finance an installation on easy terms. He's in the Yellow Pages under "Air Conditioning Equipment."

GENERAL ELECTRIC

10 WAYS TO IMPROVE YOUR HOT WATER SUPPLY

notorious traps for scale. They may be the bottlenecks that choke off your supply.

4. Insulate long pipe runs. As water stands or passes through uninsulated pipe, it loses heat. A ten-foot length of common galvanized iron pipe can dissipate water heat from as much as 200 gallons a month. Exposed pipes can be easily and inexpensively insulated with wrap-around Fiberglas.

5. Install a tempering tank. It can be almost any kind of metal water tank. Cold water entering your heater may have a temperature of only 40 degrees. If you route it to a tempering tank first, it may have a chance to warm up to room temperature (70 degrees or more) before going to the heater. This eases the load on the heater and may increase its output 25 percent or more. The larger the tank the better, and it should not be insulated. You can buy an 82-gallon glass-lined water tank for about $50, from dealers in well pumps and equipment. A tempering tank may sweat, so be sure to locate it where condensation can be drained away easily.

6. Add a storage tank. In some areas there is a lower rate for electricity used in water heating, but you get electricity only during "off-peak" hours—the hours when the demand for electricity for other purposes is low. This may mean you have no heating from four o'clock in the afternoon until eleven at night. If your storage tank isn't large enough to tide you over, you can get an auxiliary tank. It should be well insulated. You can use this type of storage tank to gain greater capacity if you have a tankless heater that doesn't supply hot water fast enough.

7. Install a mixing valve. You can boost the output of hot water 10 percent or more by turning up the temperature dial on your heater to 160 degrees. A mixing valve will enable you to reduce the 160-degree temperature required for your dishwasher to 140-degree water for bath and laundry. If you have a dishwasher with its own booster heater, it can raise the temperature of its water to 180 degrees, and thus supplement your water-heating capacity.

8. Install a "circulating" system. If you have to run off gallons of cold water before hot water comes, it means that your water heater is too far from the faucet. You can stop this waste by insulating the piping and installing a return line from the faucet to the heater tank. The line should have a downslope back to the tank, and be equipped with a checkvalve to prevent backflow. Cold water will return from the faucet to the tank by gravity and be replaced by hot water.

9. Install a flow-control valve. If you have a tankless heater and the water that comes out of your faucet isn't hot enough, such a valve will slow the flow of water so it won't go through the heater before reaching the proper temperature. There will be a pressure drop, but you will get hotter water.

10. Wash your clothes in cool or cold water. You can stretch your hot-water supply by doing your washing with the new cold-water detergents. Some clothes washers use as much as 30 gallons of hot water per load, and are a major drain on hot-water systems.

Shopping for a new heater

If none of these methods solves or alleviates your problem, the only recourse is to get a larger, or an additional heater.

How do you know how large a heater you really need? Most manufacturers include a table in their sales literature which shows the heater size needed to take care of a given number of people in a family with a given number of bathrooms and hot-water-using appliances. If your anticipated heater requirements fall on the borderline, always buy the next larger size—it will be well worth the few extra dollars to gain this additional margin of reserve. The larger tank size will also extend the life of the heater, since the more often a tank is heated, the more rapidly it will tend to corrode.

However, it should be remembered that the amount of hot water you can get from a heater does not depend entirely on how large the tank is. The rate at which it can produce—or recover—hot water is also an important factor. "Recovery rate" simply means the ability of the water heater to supply another full tank of hot water after the first full tank has been used. For one hour's use you can figure on 85 percent of the stored tankful of hot water plus the rated recovery amount. (A heater can deliver only 85 percent of its tank capacity without a sharp temperature drop.) are changing the location of your heater in an existing home—or planning a new home—it is well to weigh fuel considerations.

Fuel rates vary widely from region to region. A comparison of local fuel rates will generally determine your most economical course. But be sure to take a long-range point of view. The cost of certain fuels may be changing during the next decade as some sources are depleted and others become increasingly available.

Gas-fired water heaters have very rapid recovery, so their tank capacity can be relatively small. They heat three to four times faster than electricity, but require a flue and must be installed where their burner can get combustion air without presenting a fire hazard.

To get maximum hot water with greatest economy in a gas heater, select one that has more than one burner setting. Low-flame heating is the most efficient. A heater with two or three flame levels operates on high only when the demand is great, on low at other times.

Electric water heaters have slower rates of heating—which necessitate larger storage tank capacity—but possess certain marked advantages over other types. Requiring no air supply or venting, electric heaters can be installed in tight places anywhere in the house without back, side or front clearance. An electric heater never has to be cleaned. Its heating elements are well above the level of sludge deposits, and lime won't adhere to them.

A new tankless electric water heater has appeared on the horizon. Hardly larger than a family Bible, it heats by passing a current right through the water. It can be concealed in a lavatory cabinet.

Oil-fired water heaters have the fastest recovery rate. With a 30-gallon tank they can deliver 120 gallons an hour. This is more than the average household needs. But since these heaters cost considerably more, they aren't a wise investment unless you need extraordinary capacity.

If you are building a new home, or installing an entirely new heating system in your old, there are advantages in having the house-heating boiler also supply your domestic hot water. It's good for the boiler. Running it during the summer months helps prevent corrosion and rust, and keeps the motors dry. Having the heating plant do both jobs means one less piece of equipment to service.

The outer jackets of most water heaters manufactured today are made of steel. Because steel is easily corroded, all but the low-priced, economy class heaters are lined with such "non-ferrous," corrosion-resistant materials as glass, monel alloys, and molded stone or cement. The great majority of water heaters sold today have glass linings.

A new glass-lined water heater can be expected to last 10 to 12 years. Some warranties are for 15 years, but if you read the fine print you will see that you can get outright replacement for only 7 and a half years. After that, you are credited on a pro-rata basis. At 8 years you'll get back less than half. Similarily, 10-year warranties are pro-rated after 5 years.

No matter which kind of heater you buy, no matter which fuel you use, no matter how much you choose to pay—you are sure to find that a plentiful supply of hot water is still one of today's best bargains in sheer human luxury. ■

How to grow a miniature garden under glass

Create your own, then enjoy the glass-encased beauty of tropical or woodland plants growing under ideal conditions

By KATHLEEN FREDERICK

• The easiest and most exciting way to grow moisture-loving plants is to encase them in glass.

What other way of growing plants demands watering only once or twice a month? No other room decoration combines the beauty of lustrous reflective glass with the many subtle shades of greens in the plants. Most important, this method of growing small houseplants is the most conducive to their thriving in the dry winter atmosphere of heated homes. The glass enclosure protects the plants from a loss of moisture into the room's atmosphere. You can actually see this happen as tiny droplets of condensation appear on the inside of the glass, thus assuring you that your plants absorb the moisture.

Dry atmosphere is not the only adverse condition that terrariums correct. Plants with delicate leaves or brittle stems and those needing special treatment thrive when grown in terrariums. The glass container also protects plants from drafts.

It was an accidental discovery in the early 1800's by Dr. Nathaniel Ward, a London physician turned botanist, that began the first miniature greenhouse. He found a slip of Irish fern (Trichomanes radicans) growing in the moist earth, which he collected and placed in a corked glass jar. He used the "Wardian case," as he called his glass bottle, to grow and transport young plants all over the world. Today, many exotic and fragile plants are grown indoors using the same method Dr. Ward used almost 150 years ago.

As varied as the plants suitable to terrarium growing are the choices of glass containers for the garden. To reflect the dark, rich grain of the dining-room table, choose a glass-covered urn or a handsome footed flower grower. For a low coffee table, a smaller glass container, such as a footed brandy inhaler or a covered apothecary jar, is ideal. Most glassware departments of large department stores carry a wide variety of containers with lids.

When deciding upon the container, keep in mind the size of the plants in relation to the container, the location of the terrarium in the room, and the size of the opening of the container. (The larger the opening, the easier it will be for planting.) No matter what your requirements, you'll find a glass holder to fit your needs.

But whatever you choose, your terrarium should be clear glass. A tinted glass jar or decanter would filter out too much light to make it possible to grow plants successfully. Since the openings of most terrariums are at least the size of an orange, they should be covered a good part of the day to prevent a moisture loss. If your container does not have its own cover, use a piece of plate glass, or Saran Wrap.

An alternative to daily airing is to allow a corner of the cover (about the size of a dime) to remain open at all times. This opening is big enough to let in the essential air, yet not too big to let all the moisture escape. You will, however, have to water your garden more frequently than once or twice a month, since moisture loss will be quicker.

A cover will be of no concern if you are the diligent and patient gardener who can get plants into a very narrow-necked bottle such as a five-gallon water jug. I know a family who found such an oversized bottle in an antique shop and successfully converted it into a terrarium. Several hours of careful maneuvering with thin sticks were needed to plant the tiny plants, but these efforts have been rewarded by the pleasure they have in watching their unique bottled garden add color to their living room.

It is best to group plants that thrive under the same conditions in one terrarium. If you want to start a woodland garden with tiny plants and mosses picked while you are on a nature walk, use only those plants that need a cool, damp location. Don't include any cacti, which require dryness and sunlight. Two good woodland starting plants are partridge-berry (Mitchella repens) and pipsissewa (Chimaphila maculata, C. umbellata).

For your woodland garden, plan to start collecting in the autumn after the arrival of the cold weather, for plants collected then make a more satisfactory growth than those gathered before the first frost. As you walk, collect moss (Sphagnum is good) from rocks for lining the bottom of your container. You will find that moss adds texture to indoor gardens, especially if they are visible on all sides as are those in a footed glass container. Also add woodland fern to your native woodland garden or try growing a fern garden if your container is large enough. Look for small ferns such as the common polypody (Polypodium vulgare), maidenhair spleenwort (Asplenium trichomanes), and mountain holly-fern (Polystichum lonchitis). If woodland plants, mosses, or ferns are not native to your area, try getting them at a good nursery or from a cultivated garden.

For the city dweller, the tropical garden (which requires a warmer room than the woodland garden) is better suited. In fact, plants such as African violets (Saintpaulia ionantha) and various bromiliads (Cryptanthus, Billbergia, and Aechmea species) thrive better in enclosed glass areas.

Try to get at least one flowering plant for an added touch of color to your garden. Hepatica (Hepatica americana, H. nobilis, and H. acutiloba), sleighbells (Synthyris), and wild strawberries (Fragaria virginiana and F. vesca) are excellent choices for your woodland garden. African violets and begonias are good for a cultivated tropical garden.

Two very valuable guides that would help you identify woodland plants collected on a nature walk are Beginner's Guide to Wild Flowers by Ethel Hausman (Putnam's, $3.95) for plants found in the East and Midwest, and Field Book of Western Wild Flowers by Margaret Armstrong (Putnam's, $5) for plants of the West.

your miniature garden, place a one-inch layer of drainage material into the clean container (lined first with moss if underside can be seen). This layer may be pebbles, clean gravel, or even broken brick chips. It is needed to hold the excess moisture which seeps down from the top layer of soil. The moisture will eventually be reabsorbed by the soil. Miniature tools, available at garden-supply stores, work the best for planting and caring for miniature gardens. A thin layer of moss or dead leaves on top of the gravel will prevent any soil from filtering into the bottom drainage layer. The final layer should be good organic soil. Try one part peat moss and one part either sandy soil, loam, or topsoil. Regular garden soil is usually too soggy for a terrarium, but you can use the potting soil if plants are transferred from pots. Use enough soil to enable plants to take root (this will be the same depth as they were growing in before), and then arrange soil in varying depths to create a landscaped effect.

A deciding factor in your formation of hills and valleys will be whether one will see the garden from one side or many. Once you shape the contour of the soil, you are ready to arrange the plants, watered some hours previously.

Begin with the largest ones, placing them in the middle if the container is to be viewed from all sides; in the back, if viewed from one side. Plant smaller ones around the larger, allowing space between plants, and insert moss and stones where you think they are needed. Leaves of the plants should not touch the sides of the terrarium. When planting is completed, water your garden with a fine mist and clean the leaves and glass. Use tweezers to remove any particles remaining from the arrangement.

Both the woodland and the cultivated gardens need good light but not direct sunlight. Most plants do best when placed near a window to receive the indirect morning sunlight (eastern exposure). But you are not limited to this exposure or position. If you place your garden in a room with western or northern exposure or in a room with little natural light, you may supplement with artificial light. With no natural light, plants in a terrarium can survive with 12- to 16-hour daily periods of artificial light.

The simple key to watering the plants is condensation. If there are droplets inside the glass, there will be enough moisture available for the plants. If there is no moisture and the soil is dry, spray a mist over the plants, usually once or twice a month, depending upon the rate of evaporation. Be careful not to flood the terrarium. If too much water is sprayed into it, wipe the droplets that appear inside the glass and keep the cover off until the excess moisture disappears. Fogging of the glass is caused by an excess of moisture.

Unless your container has a very small opening, keep the terrarium covered for most of the day, and give your plants about a two-to-three hour period without cover.

If you notice tiny insects inside the bowl, wipe the sides with a tissue or cloth sprayed with an insecticide. It is important to clip any leaves that turn brown or slips that fail to root, in order to insure the health of the other plants.

Such a garden should last through a year, and then it will be time to redesign your new miniature greenhouse, adding fresh moss and new plants and new ideas. ■

The case for free-standing perennial beds

There's much to be said for the old-fashioned idea of flower beds you can look at and work on from all sides

By ELSIE LOUISE SCULTHORP

• Victorian flower beds, scattered here and there on the lawns, are looked upon nowadays with disdain or, at best, with affectionate amusement. But they have one significant and important advantage which we should not overlook—they are out in the open where there is light, sunshine, and circulation of air.

Today we tend to say that flowers need a "background" to show off their color and form, and this is party true. The background, however, need not be immediate: there will always be a background not too far away, and there's always the nearby greenery of plants in the same bed, or the green of a lawn to set off the floral display. And there are some flowers that profit by standing alone.

Long perennial borders edging the lawn are a part of our garden heritage. If you have them, I'm not suggesting that you dig them up and discard them, but no one can deny that they're difficult to plan, difficult to keep full of seasonal color, and difficult to maintain.

If you have wide perennial beds, you know that you need enough room between the flower bed and the background of a wall, hedge, or fence to help take care of invasive hedge roots, to give you a working space, and to give the plants elbow room. This working space should be the width of a comfortable footpath.

Plants should be free of any structural or planted background that might block light, air, and sunshine, all of which are essential to strong and healthy growth.

Having theoretically moved the perennial bed this far, let's see if it isn't possible to move it really out into the open. It can be a much pleasanter and more satisfactory way of gardening; the plants will have space to develop their natural habits of growth; they'll branch out more fully and produce more and better flowers. With cultural conditions more to their liking, they will develop into sturdier specimens.

When plants respond to better growing conditions, you can usually maintain a good effect with fewer plants. And, of course, the opportunity of working on all sides of the flower beds will facilitate maintenance and lighten your labor.

And there's another advantage—the flowers can be seen and enjoyed from all sides. As you walk around the garden, there will be a continual unfolding panorama of color and color combinations, so much more appealing and interesting than the usual head-on or end views of the long perennial border.

Peter Henderson, in his Gardening for Pleasure (O. Judd, New York, 1888) recommended free-standing flower beds, and some of his recommendations are applicable today—although his remarks reflected the Victorian idea of what constitutes a proper flower bed. He described one flower bed with the following plants arranged in concentric circles. It's an example that will indicate the gains we've made in gardening since the 1880's.

Canna indica zebrina, leaves green and brown striped.
Salvia splendens, flowers scarlet.
Golden coleus, leaves orange and brown.
Achyranthes, leaves rich crimson.
Phalaris arundinacea var. leaves white and green.
Achyranthes gilsoni, leaves carmine.
Bronze geranium, leaves golden bronze.
Centaurea candida, leaves white.
Alternanthera, leaves crimson and yellow.
Lobelia, flowers blue.

The plants are named as nearly as possible in the order of their height, with the first being the tallest—about six feet. Mr. Henderson goes on to say:

"Anyone who has not yet seen the wonderful effects produced by the massing of plants in this way has a treat before him . . . and of course it will be understood that a bed of any shape can be planted in this manner as well as in circular beds.

"Planting in this style admits of unlimited variety in the form of the beds and contrasts in colors. So great is the care exercised in arranging the designs that colored papers, giving the exact tints of the leading flowers and colored foliage are supplied by the dealers, in order that colored designs may be made and studied before putting them into execution; for a single misplaced color may spoil the effect of the whole. . . ."

Well, most of this advice we can happily disregard. But his recommendations for the massing of plants, for careful planning of color relationships, and that "beds of any shape" may be used are worth taking to heart.

We must realize that we can do more with perennial beds than move them away from a structural or planted background. We can make them assume any shape, and give them any location that will best suit our purposes and complement our surroundings.

Of course, many contemporary gardens have planting beds of informal design, but they are usually used as ground cover areas or for occasional planting, and are not designed as perennial flower beds.

Free-standing planting beds, whether formal or informal, should be carefully and expertly integrated with the existing garden. It is best, in fact, if they are designed as a part of the original garden plan. At any rate, from both esthetic and horticultural considerations, there's a good case for making our perennial beds more flexible, and having color where we need and want it. ■

Baalbek, first-century wonder in stone, is a city of Roman temples in Lebanon's fertile Bekaa plain, backdropped by mountains.

The next "IN" country: Lebanon— Land of the Phoenicians

By ELIANE GÉBARA

• Sophisticated travelers—those who have sampled most of the modern world—are rediscovering Lebanon, land of the Phoenicians, who discovered a good part of the world on their own hook some 6,000 years ago. Beirut, its urbane, modern capital on the Mediterranean and the city an airborne traveler first comes upon, is one of those new eastern oases of the comfortable, good life that today's globe-circling businessmen look forward to as they do to Paris, Rome, London, and New York. Meantime, tourists and vacationists, having sampled the delights of this seaport, are now pushing out into all of Lebanon, from its 150-mile "coast of the gods," across its central plain (called Bekaa) to its snow-shawled mountains, where you can be skiing almost before your bathing (Please turn to page 180) suit is dry from a dip in the warm blue sea.

Remains of past glory are everywhere to be found in Lebanon. This is the Temple of Nika. The famous cedar forests, in the northern part of the country, are now developed as one of Lebanon's ski areas.

Old harbors with such evocative names as Tyre and Sidon, the prodigious temples of Baalbek, the churches and castles of the crusading Middle Ages, minarets and mosques of the Islamic world all blend to make this country the most original of the Middle East. There is a magnificent medley of cultures to savor. The country is like a living museum, offering its historic treasures among trees, verdure, and flowers in limpid light that mellows the harshness of ancient stone. Wherever he goes, the traveler will meet towns older than history, like thousands-of-years-old Byblos (from which our word "bible" derives), encountering constant reminders of such history makers as Ahiram, Ramses, Nebuchadnezzar, Marcus Aurelius, Cleopatra, and Caesar.

Beirut, the "magic gate" city

Beirut, seen from the sea or the air, is an unforgettable sight. Rising behind it are the beautiful mountains bathed in sunlight, or should it be during the winter, capped with snow or hidden by mist. A smiling city of nearly one million inhabitants, it is quite rightly named "the Gateway of Asia": one hour's flight to Jerusalem and the Holy Land; half an hour's flight to Damascus; two hours to Istanbul; two hours to Athens; one hour to Cairo. It stands at a wonderful crossroads of continents and international transit between the Mediterranean and Central Asia. Visited by numerous ships, it has long quays on deep water that enable the biggest commercial and tourist ships to come alongside in the best conditions. Its free zone (no duty) is the typical link between the West, the Near East, and the Middle East. It serves the countries of the Arabian peninsula and the Persian Gulf—even farther, since the Brazilian Government uses its free zone to store its coffee.

Its International Airport situated at Khalde, ten kilometers (or six miles) south of the city, is one of the world's most modern. Hostesses, officially delegated by the National Council of Tourism, are on hand to welcome tourists and offer advice and assistance.

Beirut is one of the oldest settlements of man. In fact, its history can be traced back to the very origins of humanity.

In very large proportion, the income of the capital derives from services, and the well kept shops of the city are a reflection of the far-ranging activities of the inhabitants. The Beiruti is usually a first-class businessman. This probably comes from the fact that the Lebanese are the descendants of the Phoenicians, who are said to have discovered trade.

Lebanon enjoys a free economic system. There are no currency restrictions there. A traveler may bring in or take out any amount of money he wants. Because of exchange facilities, stores and shops of the city are stocked with goods

Handbook for Upgrading Your Bathrooms

35 pages of ideas and facts to fertilize your dreams of private luxury

The two photographs here give some idea of the revolution that has taken place recently in bathroom planning, finishing, and furnishing. In them you can see the best of the old (ceramic tile, marble, etc.) combined with the new (plastic laminates, vinyls, etc.). Compare them with bathrooms only 20 years old for counter space, mirrors, lighting, and luxury of finish. Left, bathroom designed by Architect Roland Terry; right, room designed by William Pahlmann for the New York Hilton.

Home's latest glamour room: The Bathroom

Different decades seem to dote on different things.

In the 1950's, more loving care—and money—were lavished on kitchens than on any other room in the house. Then, as we neared the 1960's, the bathroom began to loom on the horizon as a true dark horse. By now the glamorous, sybaritic bath has developed into a broad trend. Prefabricated houses in the $25,000 to $30,000 category now have long counters with His and Her lavatory bowls. Now most new houses possess some form of luxurious bathing, at least for the master bathroom.

Simultaneously, more and more old houses have been remodeled to update their bathrooms, furnishing them with many luxuries that go far beyond pure functionalism.

All of this has been spurred by the fine performance and appearance inherent in dozens of new materials: laminated plastics, plastic wall coverings, vinyl-coated wallpapers, etc. Added to the tried-and-proved materials, such as ceramic tile, marble, etc., there are now literally hundreds of surfacing materials that look elegant, yet can take the beating of being spattered by all those things with which we splash, rub, and anoint ourselves.

These 35 pages should help crystallize your dreams of bathroom luxury and elegance.

How to dress up a stock tub

• In the recent rush to glamorize the bathroom, some designers have turned to custom-made tubs in new forms—sunken, circular, neck-deep, oversize, etc. We report on these in the stories that follow, but of equal importance are the new ways other designers have found to raise the ready-made stock tub to the level of the other elegant furnishings.

The enclosing of a stock tub with another material has much to recommend it over the custom-made tub. Much of the same esthetic purpose—to put the tub in harmony with the rest of the room—is achieved. Yet, because the unit that holds the bath water is still the tub itself, there are no special problems of waterproofing joints, building in a drain, etc. In designing the enclosure for the tub, you have complete freedom to add ledges, seats, or shelves that will make the tub area become an integral part of its surroundings.

The materials you may use to dress up a tub vary from the most luxurious to the most modest. Here, and on the next six pages, are enclosures done with marble, tile, wood, and slate. In each case the material is used elsewhere in the room so that the aim—integration of design—is achieved.

Wide wood ledge caps this enclosure designed for a guest bath in a remodeled house. One of the values of enclosures like this is that it hides the age of the tub. Otto Zenke, Inc., designers.

Since many decorative materials cannot easily be formed or shaped into tub proportions, it is often better to simply sheath a standard tub. This avoids the problems of waterproof joints and drain outlets. Marble is the material in the two photographs on this page. Above, in a house designed by Wurster, Bernardi, and Emmons; left, in the Bruno Graf home.

Sheathing-in an ordinary tub can have advantages beyond the obvious esthetic one. In this bathroom designed by Mervyn Barnett (above and right), the ceramic tile enclosure for the tub was extended out to make a substantial bench about 14" wide. It serves as an extra seat in this bath-dressing room and also as a shelf for bathing accessories.

Since a tub is used so rarely during the day, here's a way of letting it lead a double life (photograph above). A comfortable cushion upholstered to supporting plywood turns the tub into a seat-chaise. Roll bolsters and throw pillows easily conceal the faucets and soap dish, so the whole has quite an elegant look. At left you see how it looks when cushion is removed for regular bathing use. Tile hides out-of-date tub. Mark Nelson, designer.

Like the example on the opposite page, this tub (right) has become a useful chaise, but here the enclosure is done with wood instead of tile. When the seat cushion and bolster are removed, the wood top hinges up to reveal tub (above). Catherine Armstrong, designer.

The possible enclosures for a tub are limited only by the materials available. At the left, in a home in Tucson, Ariz., the availability of a heavily veined onyx marble from a source in Mexico led to this unusual installation. Same material is used for the walls, the floor, and the tub. Mr. and Mrs. John W. Murphey, owners. Juan Warner Baz, arch.

Many older tubs (and some institutional tubs made today) have a rolled lip under which you can neatly fit almost any material you want. At the left is such a tub, enclosed with marble. Counters and backsplash area are matching marble. Doors and drawers are of wood.

Another marble installation illustrates the luxurious quality of the material. However, a good part of an installation like this is on the walls, where full thickness is not essential. Half-inch marble is adequate here and can reduce the cost. Edward Stone, architect.

Below and at the right is an unusual application, using the same stone of the floor to surround the tub, capping it with a wide ledge of slate. Slate is also used as the window sill and as the countertop for the lavatory. The separate shower stall is lined with unglazed tile (for good footing). Charles Warren Callister, architect.

Deep comfort in a neck-deep tub

To fully enjoy the gentle support and soothing relaxation to be had in deep water, you need a tub, such as these, deep enough to stand in

■ As every swimmer knows, there's a marvelous sense of support and freedom when you float suspended in the water. This same sensation, plus privacy and the comfort of completely controlled temperature, can be had in a bathtub—if it is large enough.

Depending upon the dimensions of the tub, you can float vertically or horizontally in the water. The tub shown on the facing page is like a small swimming pool, with room to float either way. The examples on this page are stand-up tubs for vertical use only.

The next time you go swimming, you can discover for yourself the pleasant difference in pressure between standing in water up to your neck and sitting waist-deep. ■

How to get the best light at the

It's not too late to do something about the lighting in your bathroom. The mirror is where you most need good light, and small changes there can make a big difference

By DAVID X. MANNERS

• Having excellent light at the bathroom mirror can be one of the small but real pleasures of your life. Since this is a work area, you need the best possible seeing for grooming, make-up, shaving. You need the right amount and right kind of light. And you need it from the right direction.

If you're not absolutely convinced your lighting is everything it should be, check it against the following principles. Improvement may be simple. The first thing to understand is that it's you that must be lighted, not the mirror. Some small degree of light spilling on the mirror does no harm. It is reflected back and so spreads the light. But to shine lights primarily on the mirror means dazzling reflections.

The best place to have lights is above the mirror and or at its sides. Light from above is the most natural and the most comfortable. Your eyes are built for light from that direction, thanks to the overhang of your brows. But an over-the-mirror light is not the best kind for shadowless illumination. For that, side lights are better. Providing lighting from two opposing directions, they fill in features that otherwise would be left in shadow.

Side lights do have limitations. It's easy to avoid looking at lights above the mirror, but it takes conscious effort to keep from seeing side lights, especially if they are closer together than 30″. Women are about equally divided when it comes to choosing between lights placed above a mirror or at its sides. Men almost unanimously will choose the side lighting, because side placement provides under-chin light for shaving. If side lights extend a few inches above the top of the head and aren't too far to each side, they also give good light for hair-grooming. But when a mirror is wide or low on the wall, lights across its top are needed in addition to side lights or you just don't get enough light.

Wherever lights are, you don't want them to be bright. If you can't look at your lights without discomfort, they're too bright. If you see an afterimage when you look away,

The best spacing for vertical side lights like these is 30″. The minimum recommended spacing is 24″. Bare bulbs should not be brighter than 15 watts, and preferably of the nonglare variety designed especially for make-up. Fixture, Lightolier's "Allegro."

Light from above is the most comfortable to the human eye, and here it is provided naturally by a skylight and artificially by an incandescent strip. Light-colored walls and counters, by their high reflectance, will aid light distribution and soften shadows.

bathroom mirror

they're much too bright. Bright light, whether it comes from a bulb, or from the reflection of bulbs in a mirror, is blinding. It closes the retina of the eye. Instead of improving your vision, high-intensity light impairs it.

How do you get enough light from low-intensity sources? By having many lights, and broad or extended strips of light, rather than a few dazzling pinpoints. If you start with a fairly high level of good general lighting, such as is provided by a luminous ceiling or well-placed ceiling lights, you'll need less light shining directly on you to achieve good seeing. But you can't have good light at the mirror from general lighting alone. The important lights must be focused directly on you, just as they are when you are having your picture taken. In that respect, a mirror is like a camera. The success of its picture depends on how well the subject is lighted.

Professional make-up people know that make-up must follow the structure of the face. Shadows make eyes appear too deep, falsely exaggerate lines, and otherwise distort facial features. Only shadowless light reveals true contours and you as you really are. The more directions light is from, the less the likelihood of shadows.

Soffit light can be a simple structure, like one below. Important advantages of soffit technique are that it brings light down closer to where it's needed, and that it bounces more light off counter top. Decoratively, it helps create intimacy where ceiling is high.

Plan shows how well a laundry center can be fitted into a hallway near bedrooms and baths. A 10′-long space (left) combines washer, dryer, tub, and drip-dry stall. Folding doors close it off. Sketch at top shows concrete trough which supports equipment. It leads to drain in case of overflow. Tiled end takes drip from drip-dry stall. Hansel B. Nowling, owner. James DeLong, arch.

Put the washer-dryer in or near the bath

▪ Since most laundry originates in the bedroom-bathroom area, it only makes sense to locate the laundry equipment nearby. Modern washers and dryers are so complete that you need space only for the machines themselves. The utility requirements—hot and cold water, drain, electric outlet, and, in some cases, a gas line—are almost identical with those needed for the bathroom anyway, so there is very little additional plumbing or electrical work.

The equipment takes little space. The normal side-by-side washer and dryer use up five feet in width and about 28 inches in depth. The height varies, depending on whether it is front- or top-loading. But even this small space can be cut down by using stack-on machines or a combination washer-dryer. These take up only 27 inches to 30 inches in width. You will, of course, need space in front for working.

With these modest space demands, the laundry equipment may be put in the bathroom itself, in a closet, in an adjacent hall, or, if you have the space, in a room by itself. Other items may then be added: drip-dry hanging space, sink, work counter, cabinet storage, ironing equipment, etc. ▪

Good exercise habits are difficult to acquire and much too easy to break. Inconvenience is often the reason body-building programs are ineffective and short-lived. Having a rowing machine, such as the one at right, or other exercise equipment in or near the bathroom is a constant reminder of worth-while routine.

Most of the time, the pad above serves as a seat cushion and cover for a storage chest below. Icy cosmetics for the facial addict

Two ways to bring natural light and ventilation into an inside bathroom

Sometimes a remodeling will work only by totally enclosing a bathroom—without exterior walls and windows. In such a case, natural light and air can still be obtained through the roof. A new facility for immaculate bathroom cleanliness

Brand-new this fall is an American version of the bidet. It provides constantly warmed water and warmed air (for drying) aimed at the proper parts of the posterior. It enables one to wash after every use of the toilet and eliminates the use of paper. One switch controls both water and air. Cost about $180 (f.o.b. Gardena, Cal.), plus installation. Find extra space—look where you've never looked before

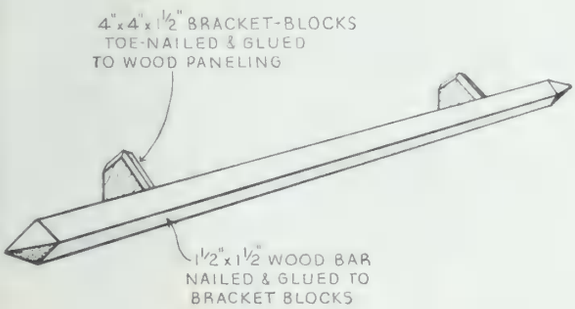
The space above the lavatory is the one area most often wasted or ignored. It can be useful, and the unobtrusive cabinet above shows one good way. Plain doors conceal enough supplies for most bathroom needs. One side of top shelf holds paper towels, leaving room at the other for bulbs. Philip Wadsworth, designer.

A shower that needs no enclosure

The shower bath grows in popularity, and so do the ways for making it more enjoyable and refreshing. The installation at left is completely open. Curtain is unnecessary. Three-side stall is lighter, less confining than most conventional, closed showers. Air circulation is better. Charles Montooth, designer.



The problem of getting enough storage space is surpassed only by the decision of where it should be located and how it can best be arranged for efficient use. If possible, linens should go near bath, as in the dressing room above. Note pull-out shelf for sorting. Such cabinets could be added to many upstairs halls.

Electric Bathroom Heaters: how to choose bathroom. Here's how to provide it

• Every bathroom needs auxiliary heat, and for good reasons. It gives you an added flexibility of control, so you can quickly raise the temperature and be comfortable when you are wearing few clothes or step wet from your bath. An auxiliary electric bathroom heater can fill in at those seasons of the year when your main heating plant isn't running. It can make up for the shortcomings of a central system that is consistently inadequate.

You want your auxiliary heater to be effective, attractive, safe, out of the way, quiet, and trouble-free. How fast does it heat up? Will it cause drafts? Is a wall heater better than a ceiling type? How about baseboard heaters? Are more expensive heaters necessarily better? These are some of the questions that need answering.

No one heater is best for all bathrooms. Each type has its good points and its limitations. All produce the same amount of heat for the amount of electricity used. But they don't all put heat where it does the most good, nor do they provide it with equal speed. Some heaters are safer, but also slower. To gain one feature you often have to sacrifice another. Some heaters are good for large bathrooms but objectionable for small ones. And there is a difference in the quality of heat provided.

When wall space is nonexistent, the space below a counter top can accommodate a heater. Such installation is simpler than cutting into wall. Heater can be used with thermostat, timer.

Most bathtubs and stall showers can have steam facilities added. Turning on shower clears air of steam after session is over. Thermasol steam generator, right, can also provide the dry heat for a "dry heat bath."

How to prepare your house for steam room or sauna

▪ A steam room or a sauna offers a depth of stimulation and relaxation no ordinary bathing can provide. Opening your pores and making you perspire as even the most strenuous exercise can't, these thermal baths cleanse your body from the inside out. Undeniably, they offer a variety of both cosmetic and physical benefits.

But as good as they may be for you, they may not be good for your house if you install either or both of them without regard to their condensation problems. Saunas are being sold these days in sizes and types to fit any pocketbook and any space needs. Some can be installed in areas no larger than a closet. Steam facilities (Please turn to page 240)

The Pros and Cons of Retirement Cities

By ROBERT L. SIEGEL

• An amazing new trend in housing has been developing in the last four years: the building of large communities (or large buildings) which require that all residents be of a certain minimum age. Segregation based on your birthday, you might call it.

But no matter what your age, it is a trend worth knowing about. For it can help you help your parents with their retirement planning. Or it can help you in planning your own future in the ten or twenty years before you reach retirement. Some situations involve the buying of a second home (for vacation purposes) years before you intend to retire and live there permanently.

What has happened is this: the building of a community which offers men and women "over 50" a way to escape the boredom and loneliness of old age. Whole cities have sprung up, where thousands of older citizens are offered a never-known-before package of stimulating play and independence. For many, these cities will make retirement not something to dread but something to anticipate.

Most retirement communities are appearing in the South and the West—thanks to the benign climate. In Southern California alone, there are over 225 retirement projects, with half as many in the planning stage. But even in northern states, retirement villages are rising near Seattle, Denver, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Chicago, Cincinnati, New York, and in New Hampshire.

The impetus for this great growth, of course, is the unprecedented increase in the number of people over 50. Today this group totals some 44 million, ten million (Please turn the page) more than the country had in 1950. Bolstered by pensions and fat savings accounts, these people are moving into Sun City, Ariz., Palm City, Calif., Leisure Village, N.J., Windsor Gardens in Denver, or Keewaydin Shores in Laconia, N.H.

Big builder Del E. Webb, 67, opened the retirement era in 1960 by unveiling Sun City, Ariz. He has since opened three other retirement cities—two in California and one in Florida. Altogether, he provides housing and recreation for more than 15,350 men and women who average about 65 years of age.

But the biggest retirement builder of all is a young man, Ross W. Cortese, 47, who has already opened three "Leisure Worlds" in California for people over 51. One at Seal Beach, which opened in 1961, is the nation's largest. It houses 11,000 adults in 6,470 apartments crammed into 741 acres of the defunct Los Alamitos ranch. It was virtually sold out in a year and a half. The other two Leisure Worlds are at Laguna Hills (behind Laguna Beach) and Walnut Creek (over the foothills back of Berkeley). Both opened for sales early this year.

Cortese is planning to launch (Please turn the page)

A major piece in the American of Martinsville furniture group is this 74″-long buffet. One of its unusual features is a concealed drawer at the bottom just the right size for dining-table leaves, which are often difficult to store properly. In addition to shelf storage space, the buffet also has two slide-out trays for linens and a compartmented drawer for flat silver. The wood is walnut, hand-rubbed to a satin finish.

three other communities: in Norbeck, Md., near Washington, D.C. (with 15,000 units); near Princeton, N. J. (20,000 units); and near Chicago (20,000 units). In addition, Cortese intends to start retirement communities in Hawaii and in Switzerland.

Cortese has older people so excited about his projects that their demand to get into his Leisure Worlds is creating waiting lists six to nine months long. At Laguna Hills, Cortese's second retirement project in California, 387 units were sold in the first 72 hours after a new section was opened in June.

What's the big attraction at these Leisure Worlds?

At Seal Beach, for about $1,100 down and a single monthly payment of about $115 (against purchase prices of $10,900 to $13,800), retirees moved into two-bedroom garden apartments and into a new world of active retirement. Seal Beachers get three clubhouses, open 24 hours a day, crammed with rooms for playing pool, woodworking, sewing, with classrooms for studying investments, painting, Spanish, and "great books." There's a swimming pool, a therapeutic pool, and a continuous round of parties, bridge games, dances (square and otherwise), guest speakers, golf, and sight-seeing tours around California and the West. There's a 2,500-seat amphitheater modeled after the Hollywood Bowl, a 24-hour security guard, and even a female poker club. Free transportation whisks the Seal Beacher from home to shopping center to medical building with its 12 full-time doctors and 23 full-time nurses. When Seal Beach first (Please turn to page 245)

One of the pleasantest features of the Leisure World at Walnut Creek is the integration of outdoor spaces into the apartment floor plans. Some apartments have sheltered entrance courts that become private terraces. Others, like the one here, have a fully enclosed atrium of their own. This one opens directly off the dining area and is a generous 11′ by 13′. In the breezy San Francisco area, the walls are both for wind protection and for privacy.

Should young and old mix socially?

A hostess who's an old hand at it tells you why she thinks it's important and how to do it successfully

By MARVA SHEARER
House Beautiful's Family Editor

• There is nothing startlingly new about young-and-old family parties. Our grandparents, with large families and larger homes, often included the children in their party-giving. Our parents did, too. And now, at this mid-point in our lives, my husband and I seem to be giving or going to such genial affairs with our children. The only new element in this form of entertaining is the writing about it. Rarely do such parties get attention in print. Family-style dinners are seldom mentioned in the society pages. Table settings suitable for such gatherings never get publicized. Still fewer hostesses make a reputation on gourmet cooking for mixed-age groups. And yet it takes know-how and a certain flair to be a success in this area.

For this reason, here and now, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL acknowledges family entertaining as a skilled and desirable form of hostessing at which I take pride in being knowledgeable, if not expert. Based on my long experience, I most heartily recommend this unheralded form of home entertaining as fun for all ages.

The answer to the "why" of family entertaining is short and simple. Everyone enjoys it—but for different reasons.

My husband, for example, says he can visit with only six or eight friends at one time. He prefers having just a few couples to our house for dinner and an evening of quiet amusement. He is of the strong opinion that the typical social or business cocktail parties—where guests stand in noisy, smoke-filled rooms—are tiring and pointless, nor does he care for large dinner parties, buffet or formally served. To him, they appear to be a collection of small groupings in which you visit with the people on either side of you and no others. He would much rather attend one "complete" party with everyone exchanging ideas, sharing the same arguments, hearing the same jokes, and truly spending the evening together. (Please turn to page 252)

Now you can have many famous china patterns in fabrics by the yard

Out of the design archives of a great china manufacturer comes this new collection of decorative fabrics

"Patrician," a classic embossed pattern in Wedgwood Queensware, suggested a textured woven fabric, was in fact the inspiration for the bedspread opposite.

Almost literally, the fabrics on these four pages are presented to you on a plate. From sheerest curtaining to brocadelike upholstery, their design inspiration comes from dinnerware patterns of Josiah Wedgwood and Sons. Woven of fibers produced by the Celanese Fiber Company, they are a sampling of the lovely results that occurred when seven home-furnishings manufacturers were invited to study the 200-year-old archives of Wedgwood patterns. They have proved that certain timeless designs can decorate whole rooms as deftly as they can beautify table settings. Shown here in an apartment decorated by Edmund Motyka, Celanese-Wedgwood home furnishings are available in more than 50 retail stores throughout the country.

Bedspread, table skirt, draperies, and headboard upholstery are acetate-and-cotton brocade, derived from the "Patrician" pattern, opposite. Comforter by Barclay retraces the blossoms of "Hathaway Rose," the plate at right. Curtains are "Appledore," Fortrel ninon by Croscill.

The graceful trailing vine of "Napoleon Ivy" is identically copied, and with great appropriateness, as a curtaining pattern on a sheer Fortrel ninon by F. Schumacher. Bone-china dinnerware in this pattern, a classic in British households, is available in this country on special order.

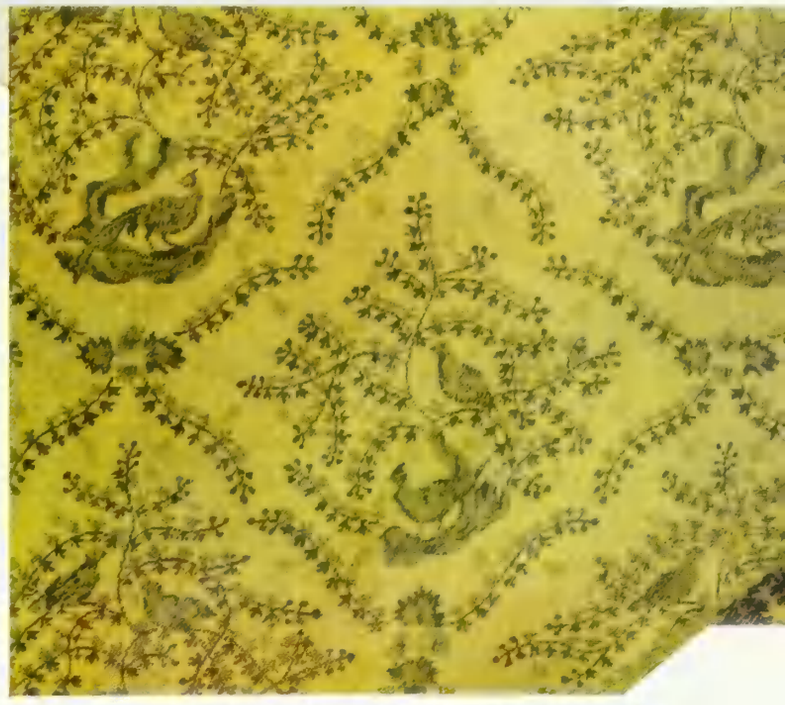
The rich patterning that borders the shoulder of this "Florentine" plate furnishes a treasure trove of design motifs. Here, its elegant Renaissance scrolls are scaled up and translated to an acetate shower curtain by Ames Shower Curtain Co. Towels, not part of the Celanese-Wedgwood collection, are by Martex.



"Strawberry Hill" plate with berries, blossoms, and leaves suggested F. Schumacher print that coordinates tablecloth and dinnerware. The design, like most in this collection, comes on many cloth weights, from sheer curtaining to dense drapery and slipcover fabric.

"Partridge in a Pear Tree," a bone china pattern which may be specially ordered, was the beguiling prototype for the Jacquard fabric at right. It is specially woven by Craftex Mills for the Drexel Furniture Company's group of 18 chairs which are part of this collection. Draperies in the room above are by the Scroll Division of Riverdale Drapery Fabrics.

Cross-hatched border of "Yellow Avocado" plate furnished the design hint for a Jacquard-weave upholstery fabric by Craftex Mills. All fabrics in the collection come in a range of colors usually derived from typical colorations found in Wedgwood china.

How to start your own wine cellar

by EDMUND PENNING-ROWSELL

Mr. Penning-Rowsell is an English wine connoisseur whose knowledge of wines of the Continent is formidable. Understandably, he does not know of the great American wines, which are seldom exported to England or Europe. To balance his inability to discuss our native wines, we will publish in December a selected list of carefully chosen American table wines which should be considered by anyone starting a cellar.

• The first prerequisite for the aspiring cellar owner is not a below-ground cellar but a reliable wine merchant—perhaps several of them, each a specialist in different types of wine. One can do without a physical cellar, and most town dwellers have to, but not without a regular wine merchant who will advise, keep wine in reserve, if necessary, and often change it if it proves unsatisfactory. Although dealings with several wine merchants may seem an extravagance, to buy regularly if modestly from several should prove, in fact, an economy.

Comparisons, allied to memory, are the basis of wine knowledge. To buy exclusively from the same firm, which itself will probably tend to buy from the same merchants and growers, may lead to a collection of less varied wine and a less excellent collection than it might be. Wine merchants in big cities have an exceptionally wide range, providing they are not in a state where state stores do the selling. But most of them naturally tend to specialize or to buy the best in particular types of wine. One firm that I know of has incomparable white Burgundies, another has an outstanding Bordeaux list, and a third is famed for his German wines. Merchants like these will be delighted to advise you in building up a cellar—and not only for purely commercial reasons.

It is necessary to establish first that a cellar—in the sense of a reserve or personal collection of wine—is worth while, and is not a relic of the spacious if privileged past. The wine lists of traditional firms grow ever more voluminous and comprehensive, with from five hundred to a thousand different kinds of wine and spirits on offer.

Why bother then to tie up money in wine? The short answer is that the wine collector can save money and drink better wine than the casual buyer. One must be warned that it takes time for all but the most affluent to build up a wine reserve, and if it is to be as representative as the owner would wish, it is a question of time and care rather than money.

Nowadays, so much wine is consumed when too young —1959 Bordeaux of distinction are already being drunk in restaurants—that all too soon much of the best disappears from the market, like out-of-print books. Given the money, one can always buy premièrs crus at a price, but the lesser wines that may develop so well often go out of stock quickly. One of the most agreeable 1953 Pomerols that I now drink cost me $1.26 a bottle in 1956.

The time it takes to establish a cellar may be shown from my own experience. I began collecting wine about the beginning of World War II, when I joined the International Exhibition Co-operative Wine Society, which started in 1874. It will be remembered that wartime rationing induced everyone to buy his complete ration of everything, whether or not it seemed immediately desirable: one never knew when it might come in useful. It made sense, therefore, to buy up one's wine ration of three dozen bottles a month, as limited by the Society in 1940. Chateaux La Gaffeliere 1934 at 34 cents, and Beaune Greves 1933 at 45 cents were splendid investments. While the ration remained at this generous level, I bought all I could from the Society and from elsewhere. For $280 I was able to build up a reasonable reserve; before it declined in the hard middle war years, I had acquired 500 bottles.

The shortage of wine during the war, coupled with the poor vintage years in most of the 1930's and during the war itself, meant that it took a long time after the war to buy wine ready for drinking: most purchases were "for stock" rather than for early consumption. For current drinking, one relied on lesser wines, the best of the wartime vintages (such as 1943), and drank up one's prewar reserve cautiously, eked out with small quantities of old wines from the firms that had them. Steadily the reserve of big, strong, and backward 1945's—still not ready to drink in many cases—was joined by the much more forward, easy-to-drink 1947's, then the much-heralded 1949's. Only later did one discover the excellent 1948 Bordeaux, which were bought in quantity by only one British wine merchant—a further argument for diversification in buying sources. Then came the cheap, plentiful 1950's, followed shortly by the 1952's and 1953's. In about 1956 the tide turned, and the fine wines of the postwar vintages began coming into their own (1947 was an exception: the wines were drinkable early and many did not last). But not until about 1958, when the quick-maturing 1952's began to be drinkable—especially the Burgundies—did I seem to have a good variety of red wine to choose from, for, of course, variety is basic in keeping a cellar.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

It is easier to start a wine reserve now, because it is still possible to buy a fair range of wines ready for drinking, particularly the 1953's. So those starting more or less from scratch do not have to acquire so great a proportion of their purchases for laying down as I did in the years 1947 to 1955. But this period of good vintages may pass, as it has done before: one should not wait too long before taking the first steps in starting a cellar.

It will not be thought, I hope, that my reluctance to drink Bordeaux and Burgundies in their youth—there is little problem with white wines—is a sign of wine snobbery. Only a few months ago, a leading Médoc château proprietor told me that it would be criminal to drink his 1945 wines. He added, for good measure, that no fine Bordeaux should be touched before it is ten (Please turn to page 259)

Dylan Thomas: an example of how to surround a subject at home

How to use the new network of culture in your own home

By EPSIE KINARD

▪ Through the printed page, the recorded sound, and the filmed picture, we can participate in the creation of our own culture in a way no other civilization has ever been able to do.

What do we mean?

Take the poet Dylan Thomas as an example. In your own home you can read his books, and books about him, listen to his readings, listen to others reading his work, read a play about him, listen to the original cast presenting the play, listen to a musical tribute to him, watch a 16-mm film of the sights and sounds of his world. And you can do two of these simultaneously, adding the sound of poetry to the sight of the lyric words on the page. In this way you can know a poet who may be tomorrow's classic.

Dylan Thomas may not be your meat. But the amount and diversity of the material about him suggests a way to tap new lines of cultural communication.

On page 256 we have listed all the sources of material by and about Dylan Thomas.

from all over the world, and it is difficult to imagine the variety of merchandise available in Beirut, from vodka to caviar, chile sauce to bourbon whisky, from Italian shoes to French perfumes. As the exchange rate is free and finds its own level according to natural supply and demand, prices for imported goods are not much higher in Lebanon (they are even, sometimes, lower) than in countries of origin. No purchase or luxury taxes are applied there.

Characteristic of the Lebanese market is the small shop, the "boutique." In one narrow street, little shops of 25 square meters, sometimes even smaller, are next to one another and are concentrated by specialties. Such streets are called "souks," and in the center of the town you have the shopping center for lingerie, ready-made dresses, called Souk Tawileh. Opposite is the souk of the shoes, (excellent leather, models from Italy and France at half price) called Maarad. But the most famous is certainly the "Jewel Souk," where thousands of jewels, gold necklaces, rings, bracelets, and brooches are displayed. Lebanese jewelry is very fine, and prices surprisingly low, for manpower is cheap and skillful. There are also the "vegetable souk," the "fruit souk," the "drapers souk," all different and each one typical.

Beirut has also developed a fashion center. Its "couturiers" do not compete with those of France or Italy but can copy any model for a tenth the price. They go twice a year to Europe, see the collections, and come back with the best models. Lebanese ladies are consequently among the world's most chic. Tailors are also excellent, and a man's suit made of the best English material will cost from 40 to 80 dollars, U.S.

A foreigner in the city will not find it difficult to occupy his free moments pleasantly. Long stretches of smooth, sandy beaches, equipped with modern swimming facilities, are at his disposal a stone's throw away. These beaches plus the Mediterranean climate of short, mild winters and long dry summers have made it a land of water sports. Whether the holiday-maker is interested in swimming, water-skiing, underwater fishing, or just lolling in the sun, he can have his choice of the most modern beach clubs. If he'd rather have a swim in soft water, most of the deluxe hotels in Beirut have a pool.

In wintertime, an hour's drive from the coastline takes you to the snow-capped mountains of Lebanon to enjoy skiing on their thrilling slopes. One of the ski resorts is in the north, near the famous cedars forest, the celebrated Cedars of Lebanon, from which the Pyramids in Egypt and King Solomon's Temple were built.

Beirut's numerous restaurants offer excellent European-Continental and oriental food, and bars and tearooms are found in great number. But you must try the Lebanese mezzé, made out of more than 70 dishes ranging from meat to crude vegetables, with the delightful hommos (mashed chick peas with sesame, oil, and lemon), and shawarma (mutton meat grilled on charcoal).

Night-life in Beirut's 150 night clubs has earned it the name of the "Paris of the Orient." Some of the world's most famous performers appear in Beirut: orchestras and troupes come from France, Italy, Spain, and North and South America. The Casino du Liban, a fifteen-minute drive from town, offers the usual games of chance and has splendid restaurants. A modern night club, the "Salle des Ambassadeurs," gives shows that match those of Las Vegas and Paris's Lido.

Sight-seeing in Beirut is easy, as several travel agencies provide guided tours in taxis at moderate fees. The "must" trips, however, are to Lebanon's famous archaeological sites, particularly Baalbek, Byblos, and Tyre.

Baalbek

Situated in the high plain of the Bekaa, between two ranges of mountains, Baalbek has, for the inquisitive visitor, a double merit. It is the most gigantic Roman temple ever built and it follows the Semitic temple-construction plan, which places the buildings on high ground dramatized with open-air esplanades. The effect is so harmonious and elegant that the massive proportions do not overwhelm.

LEBANON—LAND OF THE PHOENICIANS

Festival of Baalbek is held during the months of July and August. Against the spectacularly lighted ruins of the Temple of Bacchus, there are performances by dramatic and musical groups.

It is easy to forget that these columns are the tallest ever erected, these stones the largest ever used, this form of architecture the most massive ever conceived.

It is truly a city of the soul, the spaciousness of which is miraculously preserved. Here, more than in most ancient places, the traveler feels the spirit which undoubtedly animated the builders and pilgrims of old toward their gods.

Seeing Baalbek, Jean Cocteau said that no photograph could have given him any idea of the sensation he was experiencing. In fact, it is hard to understand the miracle of Baalbek at the sight of a simple picture. One must see the proportionate beauty of the immense temples three-dimensionally and as they are related to the high plateau on which they stand, surrounded by two ranges of mountains. One must also see the patina, laid on by centuries of sunshine, which colors edifices and tawny columns and is a testimony to their survival.

In the dark and silent nights of July and August in the Bekaa, suddenly the sound of trumpets shakes the torpor of columns and slabs, and out of the gloom now spring forth streams of light and music. This is the annual Festival of Baalbek, when the buildings ar lighted and used as the setting fo musical and dramatic spectacles The authorities in contemporar Lebanon, in organizing this annua Festival—in which dramatic art music, ballet dancing, and folklor representations revive ancient rite —have sought mainly to reassociat the present with those fervent era during which all of the arts wer used as forms of worship. Charle Munch said, when he directed th New York Philarmonic Orchestr here: "If there were no mor sound studios in the world, I woul ask to do my recording in the Tem ple of Baalbek."

It is in the homage to the go of heaven—variously called Baa Shemaim, Hadad, Jupiter—tha Baalbek was raised.

Baalbek is about 53 miles fron Beirut, a drive of about an hou and three quarters. In winter th area is open from 8 A.M. to noo and from 2 to 4; in summer, fron 8 to 12:30 and from 2:15 to 5:30 The entrance fee is one Lebanes pound, approximately 33 U.S cents. The noontime hiatus can b profitably turned to the pleasan gastronomic experience of a typ

l Lebanese lunch at the nearby lmyra Hotel, which is itself built er the ruins of a Roman theater. om May to September, the ruins e lighted and described every turday evening in a Son et Lu-ière production. tariff about $1.

eit Eddine and Deir-el-Qamar

The archaeologically avid tour- could spend a week in Baalbek, it the general visitor can get a od look at it in a morning or ternoon.

You could make a day's excur-on out of Beirut to include Baal-k, the palace of Beit Eddine, id the town of Deir-el-Qamar—a mpletely different kind of cul-re. Beit Eddine is an example grandiose architecture and de-gn built by a Lebanese emir of the te 18th and early 19th Century. epresentative of fine Lebanese afts, it is also a museum. Deir-Qamar is a little town of palaces, ilt by emirs of Lebanon, the rliest dating back to the 16th entury, reflecting the kind of ro-antic grandeur associated with e Arabian Nights.

The ancient cities

To the north of Beirut, on "the past of the gods," is Byblos, ac-ording to tradition the oldest con-nuously inhabited town in the orld, and constantly under study archaeologists.

Here the first alphabet of the orld was devised by the Phoeni-ans—ancestors of the Lebanese. its heyday, Byblos was an export nter for papyrus, upon which oks were written. Byblos became e Greek word for book, and from is comes the word "bible."

Jebail (the actual name) is to-ay only a small agricultural and shing village of a few thousand habitants. The old harbor has en a new "fishing club" that has come a most popular rendezvous r Beirutis.

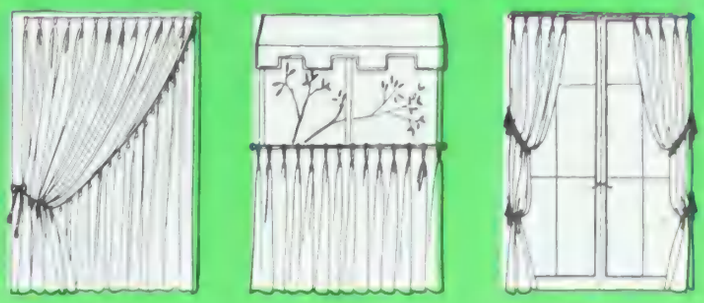
Farther north, 51 miles up the coast from Beirut, is Tripoli, the second city of Lebanon, in lush orchard country and lately grown in importance because of the pipe-line which brings in oil from the Kirkuk basin in Iraq. A melting pot of Phoenician, Roman, Greek, Islamic, and Medieval European cultures, the old part of town is marvelously peculiar with its souks, mosques, and especially beautiful old Lebanese architecture.

Southward down the coast are Tyre and Sidon, once the great metropolises of the ancient world and now a source of all sorts of information about life in the old days as disclosed by archaeological digs.

The country generally being no wider than 30 miles and a mere 150 miles long, such excursions are no problem at all.

Headquartering in Beirut, you have a broad choice of hotels. Of the first-rate hotels, many old Beirut hands set in their ways favor the St. Georges, on the sea and named for the saint who was supposed to have disposed of the dragon in this vicinity. Not on the sea but with breathtaking views of it and a stunning swimming pool of its own, there is the new Phoenicia Intercontinental. It is one of the plushest, most delightful new hotels in the East, of which the chic Lebanese themselves are enthusiastic patrons. Double room and bath in either starts at about $12, and there is a 12-percent service charge added.

Five major shipping lines and 61 air lines service Beirut. By air, according to Pan American, round-trip New York to Beirut economy class, is $798 off season (August 7 to May 21).



Visas are required, available at Lebanese consulates, where you may also get the extraordinarily well prepared and informative travel literature that has been compiled by the Lebanese National Council of Tourism. ■

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER

This mirror never lies, for the special make-up bulbs lighting it give your reflection absolutely true color values. The evenness of light distribution eliminates all facial contour shadows. Mirror, which can stand on counter or be hung on wall, includes switch, outlet. Soovia Janis Inc.

the mirror and at its sides is one way to get shadowless lighting. Another is to have light well diffused. Frosted bulbs and frosted glass or plastic panels set in front of incandescent bulbs can help in this diffusion. So can light-colored walls, ceiling, and counters.

A light-colored counter bounces back more than half the light striking it. If you have a white lavatory, it can provide under-chin light. Colored lavatories and dark counters and walls, on the other hand, are a hindrance to diffusion and can be another cause of poor lighting.

Lighting above a mirror can be built in, and can be done as a remodeling project almost as easily as when a house is constructed. The special merit of built-in lighting is that it doesn't create clutter. It simplifies things. It's part of the structure instead of something tacked on. And it can be custom-sized to match your exact requirements.

A soffit is the underside of any overhanging structure. One good way to build-in lighting is to drop the ceiling 12" or more to create a soffit 14" to 18" wide, above the mirror. Into the underside of this overhang lights are recessed. If you have a high ceiling, soffit lighting is better than ceiling lighting because you are bringing the light down closer to where you need it. It also means more light is reflected back from counter and lavatory.

Soffit lights can be shielded by frosted glass, translucent plastic, or with egg-crate-type louvers. By running this shield right up to the mirror, with no trim at the mirror, you provide a light source that continues almost without a break into the mirror. You double the apparent size of the source, and you get light from the farthest point of the reflected image.

Lights within the soffit should be centered approximately 12" out from the wall. With the ceiling for the soffit dropped 12", it allows lights within the soffit to be recessed 8" above the frosted glass or plastic panel that hides the lights. This much is necessary for good diffusion and to eliminate hot spots or hot lines of light. For best reflectivity, the inside of the soffit cavity should be painted flat white, or fixtures with polished metal reflectors should be used. In some cases it may be desirable to leave the top of the soffit open. It then gives indirect general light as well as diffused down-light.

A lighted valance is a wood or other shield running along the wall above the mirror and open at top and bottom. It throws direct light downward to work by and bounces light off the ceiling for general illumination. You can buy long-length valance-style fixtures. Lightolier makes some with wood-veneer facing. Marchand makes valance-style fixtures with mirror facing. Covering the valance with mirror creates design continuity; you are not so aware of the valance as a separate element. Marchand also makes a mirrored cabinet with mirror-concealed side lights. Touch lever and the mirrors revolve, and illuminated incandescent tubes swing into place.

You can buy a variety of fixtures designed for vertical placement at each side of a mirror. Some of these are also suitable to go above a mirror, so there can be a coordination of top and side light. Shielded incandescent side fixtures require a 60-watt lumiline bulb or four 25-watt bulbs and should have a minimum length of 10". If fluorescents are used, one 24" 20-watt tube is needed.

In planning improved lighting, you can strike a balance between function and decoration. If you have a strictly functional soffit light, you can add decorative pendant fixtures to provide side lighting. The longer their diffusing globes, the better. Their bulbs should be approximately 22" above the counter. You can use 100-watt bulbs, but they should be dimmer-controlled. You can now buy dimmers to replace any regular light switch.

Side lighting can also be provided by wall brackets and by counter lamps. Again, the more the spread of light, the better. For best seeing, side brackets should be 30" apart and centered 60" above the floor. Lamp shades should be at face height, 36" apart, and be of translucent white or ivory material. Bulb height should be 22" above the counter if you stand, 15" if you sit. Recommended bulb size is 100 watt.

Incandescent fixtures provide better light than fluorescents. No matter what is done to fluorescent lights, they can't equal incandescents for accurate rendition of color. No matter what variety or combination of tubes you use, fluorescents distort human flesh tones. You can't apply make-up intelligently by light that makes you look like an oyster. Fluorescent fixtures also present a problem in flexibility of light output. They take only one-size tube. With an incandescent, you merely have to screw in a different bulb to get a brighter or dimmer light.

On the credit side, fluorescents make it easy to extend light in a line and at low-brightness levels. They also burn more coolly and use only ⅓ as much current as incandescents for the light they produce. If you do use fluorescent fixtures, be sure to get deluxe warm white or deluxe cool white tubes. These are more accurate in their rendition of colors (particularly skin colors) than standard tubes.

You can mix deluxe warm white and deluxe cool white without color conflict, but for even lighting don't use tubes of varying diameter. To avoid dark spots, butt sockets back-to-back with no space between. A soffit light should have two rows of 40-watt tubes. Some people prefer having two rows of deluxe warm white and two of deluxe cool white, on separate switches. They then have the choice of three kinds of light.

Some incandescent bulbs are better than others. Bare standard frosted bulbs are glary no matter how low their wattage. Better are soft-white "glare-free" bulbs. G-E makes these in 15-watt and 25-watt to fit standard sockets. Really superior is a new kind of bulb called "Complexion Lamps." These bulbs are designed especially for make-up and give excellent color rendition. You won't apply too much rouge because of the sickish image you see in your mirror. They're not flattering but they're accurate.

Complexion Lamps have the small candelabrum base, but you can get adapters so they'll fit standard sockets. Six sizes of bulb (1" to 2" diameter) are available, but all are 15-watt, the maximum most people can take with comfort. They have heavier frosting, so aren't as bright as standard 15-watt bulbs. They sell for 85 cents each, but are longer-lived because they burn more coolly.

Complexion Lamp bulbs are used in a line of new wood-strip fixtures designed for instant mounting (with special tape) directly on your mirror. By means of a customizing "spare parts" kit, you can make the fixture turn corners or match any size requirements. You can also buy 1-, 2-, 3-, and 5-section "Shadows-Out" mirrors with Complexion Lamps set directly in the glass. Complexion Lamps and Shadows-Out mirrors are available at leading department and electrical stores, and are distributed by Soovia Janis, Inc., 225 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. They are designed by Eugene Barnes.

Getting good daylighting at the mirror follows essentially the same principles as getting good artificial lighting. The better the light focuses on you, the better you'll see. Accordingly, windows at either end of the lavatory counter and or above the mirror are desirable. Windows behind you should be avoided. They will put your face in shadow. Best of all is a skylight directly over the counter. Conceal a lighting fixture within its depth and it will provide light both day and night. No matter what the hour or the weather, you'll be seeing yourself in the best light. ■ can be provided "in any bathtub or stall shower." In the rush of buying and selling, the condensation factor is sometimes overlooked, but the facts are these:

The volume of water vapor produced in a steam room is enormous. If any significant amount of it finds its way into your house structure, there may be trouble. Moisture entering your house walls as invisible vapor and condensing there can weaken plaster, rot wood, and attract termites. It can ruin insulation, blister the paint on your house as it passes through outside walls. In winter it can freeze in the walls, to be released in a torrent when it thaws.

Compared to a steam room, the amount of vapor produced in a sauna is small. It is essentially a dry heat bath. In a single session no more than a quart of water, if that, may be converted into vapor. But you don't want even that much in your walls.

Happily, the solution is simple. Every wall enclosing a steam room or sauna should include a vapor barrier. Such a moisture-stopping barrier is neither difficult nor expensive to provide.

Steam room requirements

What surfacing material you use is not the crux. What matters is what is behind the surface to stop the moisture vapor before it penetrates the cold part of the house wall. Both tile and marble stop moisture, but their mortar joints definitely do not. Therefore, you still need a vapor barrier.

The best and least expensive vapor barrier material is polyethylene plastic film, 4 mils thick. It must be applied to the frame of all enclosing walls, and the ceiling too, without gaps, tears, or holes. Polyethylene plastic, often referred to merely as "poly," comes in rolls 8′ and more wide, so it is usually easy to enclose an entire bath area with a minimum of joints.

Metal lath, a mesh material, goes over the poly. It serves as a base for the plaster to which the finishing tile or marble is applied.

So much for a new wall. But what if you have an existing tile or marble wall and you don't know whether there's a vapor barrier behind it or not? What if you have a plaster ceiling or a plaster wall above the point where the tile or marble stops?

Many tile walls built in recent years are of tile applied with a rubberlike adhesive on a plasterboard base. The combination of heat and moisture in a steam room can destroy this tile adhesive and disintegrate the plasterboard.

If your tiles are all well adhered and have been in place for a number of years without any of them coming loose, you can coat the entire wall with clear epoxy. It will seal the joints, the vulnerable points. Epoxy, properly applied, may also successfully seal plaster walls above the line of the tile or even a plaster ceiling. For added security, cover them with tile or other impervious material after you've sealed them.

In the case of marble, the gloss of epoxy would not be esthetically pleasing. A possible alternate, if joints are few, is to have the joint material removed and replaced with waterproof grout.

To make a steam room out of a tub, it is necessary to close in the tub with sliding doors and either lower the ceiling or enclose the area above the doors so steam does not escape into the house. Sometimes the steam generating equipment can be installed in the dropped ceiling above the tub. Alternately, it can be installed in a closet, in the basement, or in fact almost anywhere there's space for it.

Some steam rooms are being designed so that the same generator that supplies steam can be used to heat radiators within the steam room, making it a "dry-heat" room as well. This should not be confused with a sauna, where temperatures may be upward of 180 degrees. Temperatures of even 150 degrees in a room surfaced with tile or marble would make the surfaces too hot to be touched.

Sauna requirements

The walls of a sauna are usually of 2-by-4 frame construction, with 3½"-thick fiber glass insulation between the studs. The ceiling of the sauna should have insulation 5½" thick. Over this insulated framing a continuous vapor barrier must be installed. The barrier most commonly used is aluminum foil. Foil-faced insulation batts may be used instead of insulation and foil installed separately.

As a wall and ceiling finish, tongue-in-groove kiln-dried redwood boards are usually best. Redwood has superior insulating qualities, remains cooler to the touch and has better dimensional stability than most other woods.

The ceiling in a sauna is usually low (7') to save on heat. If the sauna ceiling is below the ceiling of an existing structure, an air space must be left between the two for ventilation. A 6" ventilation space must also be left between sauna walls and any masonry walls. If a sauna wall is being installed over an existing frame wall and space is limited, 2-by-2 framing and 2"-thick insulation plus vapor barrier will serve satisfactorily.

The floor of the sauna can be matting or boards over foil.

A sauna room should be vented. This is necessary both to allow the escape of excess air as it expands with heat and to supply fresh air.

There are prefab sauna structures that come in sections providing insulation, vapor barrier, and ventilation. They go together so simply that if you are a renter, you can easily disassemble one and take it with you when you move.

One type of precut sauna is of 3-inch tongue-in-groove cedar planks. They go together like Lincoln logs. They have no vapor barrier or insulation, but the structure is designed to go within an existing room. Any vapor from the sauna will escape into the room and be dissipated rather than enter directly into the walls.

Following is a list of manufacturers of sauna heaters and prefab saunas. Some can supply construction information and building plans.

radiation is best. Radiant heat is like the heat of the sun. It travels directly to you and warms you without heating the air or the space between. It is the most desirable heat in most bathrooms because you don't have to wait for the air to warm up. You feel the heat almost immediately. It creates a minimum of air movement, and that's good, too. Air movement speeds evaporation, and even at 90 degrees can feel cooling and uncomfortable.

Not all radiant heaters are equally radiant. Some heat air and produce convected heat, as much or more than they radiate. The way to judge the amount of radiation is by how hot the heating element gets. A quartz heater at 4,000 degrees gives off 80 percent radiant heat. A glowing coil at 1,800 degrees gives off about 50 percent. An element that glows cherry-red usually will be more radiant than one that glows only slightly. One that glows not at all may have a temperature under 200 degrees and give off only 15 percent radiant heat. The rest of its heat becomes convected warm air.

How fast does it heat?

A low percentage of radiant heat doesn't mean a heater is inferior. You merely know it will be slower, and usually in a bathroom your demand is for fast heat. A ribbon element or an infrared bulb glows instantly, and you are enjoying warmth in 10 seconds. An element encased in a metal tube, like those used in electric ranges, takes about two minutes to reach full heat. A glass-panel heater, or others where a considerable body of material has to be warmed by the element, may take seven minutes or more for maximum output.

In some cases, this slowness to heat is an advantage. Slow to heat also means slow to cool, and the result is a steady, even heat output. If your bathroom is one that never gets enough heat from your central system and needs heat on a full-time basis, it is best supplied by such a heater with a low, even output. Equipped with a good thermostat, it can always keep the room within a degree or two of the desired temperature. Electric baseboards and nonglowing wall heaters are units of this type. You set the thermostat and forget it. When you want more heat, you just push up the thermostat.

Forced-air heaters

So much for speed. How about air movement? A highly popular variety of electric heater uses a fan to blow air across the heating element. In a large room, this forced movement of air may be desirable. It helps distribute heat. In a small bathroom, it can be objectionable. You can't get far enough away from the air stream, and moving air, as has been pointed out, can be drafty and uncomfortable, especially when you are wet. To avoid this problem somewhat, one forced-air heater has a fan that doesn't come on until the element is heated. At least, no cool air is ever circulated.

Further, many forced-air heaters with built-in thermostats can't function properly in a small bathroom. In a five-foot by seven-foot arrangement, the tub is invariably at one end and the door at the other. This means the only place you can put a heater is on one of the long walls where it will direct its heat at a facing wall only five feet away. The heated air, bouncing back, will inevitably satisfy the thermostat long before the room as a whole has a chance to warm up. The only real solution is a separately placed thermostat, and this means extra money.

How safe is it?

Then there is the question of safety. Fan-forced heaters run at lower temperatures than equivalent heaters that have no fan. The moving air cools the element. This is a good point in their favor. An element that glows red-hot can be a definite hazard. A hot heater is not something to back into, and though adults may be careful, children aren't. It is not recommended that any heater be installed under a towel bar or near a tissue holder, and this goes double for heaters that glow. Nor do you want such heaters behind doors or, in some cases, installed in a wall of plastic tile. Near a toilet, such a heater can be a knee burner. Near a tub it menaces anyone getting into or out of the tub.

Manufacturers have been diligent in providing grills that afford the greatest possible protection. Underwriters Laboratories, an independent testing organization, will not put a heater on their approved list if it violates basic safety principles of design and operation. But the responsibility for safety rests ultimately with the homeowner.

Baseboard heaters usually operate at fairly low temperatures. So do glass panel heaters. One type of glass heater has a metallic coating on its rear surface so that the entire panel is a low-temperature radiator. The front of the glass is dimpled, with each dimple acting as a lens to spread the radiant heat in a full 180-degree arc. Touch the panel, and it feels hot. But it won't burn you.

Many baseboard heaters have tubular heating elements that are finned. The fins mean that a far greater surface is exposed to air. This reduces the temperature of the fins and means more air is heated uniformly. If the temperature of heated air is low, there is less tendency for it to stratify at the ceiling, and to dirt-streak walls.

How about ceiling heaters?

Since wall space is usually so limited in a bathroom, the only other place to put a heater is in the ceiling. (There are drop-in electric floor heaters, but these are not advisable in a room where an overflowing tub could flood them.) A ceiling location is safe. You will not be burned by a heater there. Ceiling installation is usually simpler, too. The unit can be surface-mounted, and sometimes merely replace an existing light fixture. Thermostatic control of ceiling heaters presents a complication. You must have a separate wall thermostat, and that can easily add $15 to the cost. Wall and baseboard heaters are available with their own integral thermostats.

More important, most people feel the delivery of heat by a ceiling unit is not as satisfactory as that from a wall heater. Standing under a ceiling heater, you will feel its heat on your head and shoulders but not on your torso, and that's often where you're most chilly. Your middle sections are in the shadow of your shoulders and never get any significant exposure to the warmth. By the time any heat reaches your feet, it may be considerably enfeebled. To put heat where it counts, one type of infrared bulb ceiling heater is adjustable to focus in any direction.

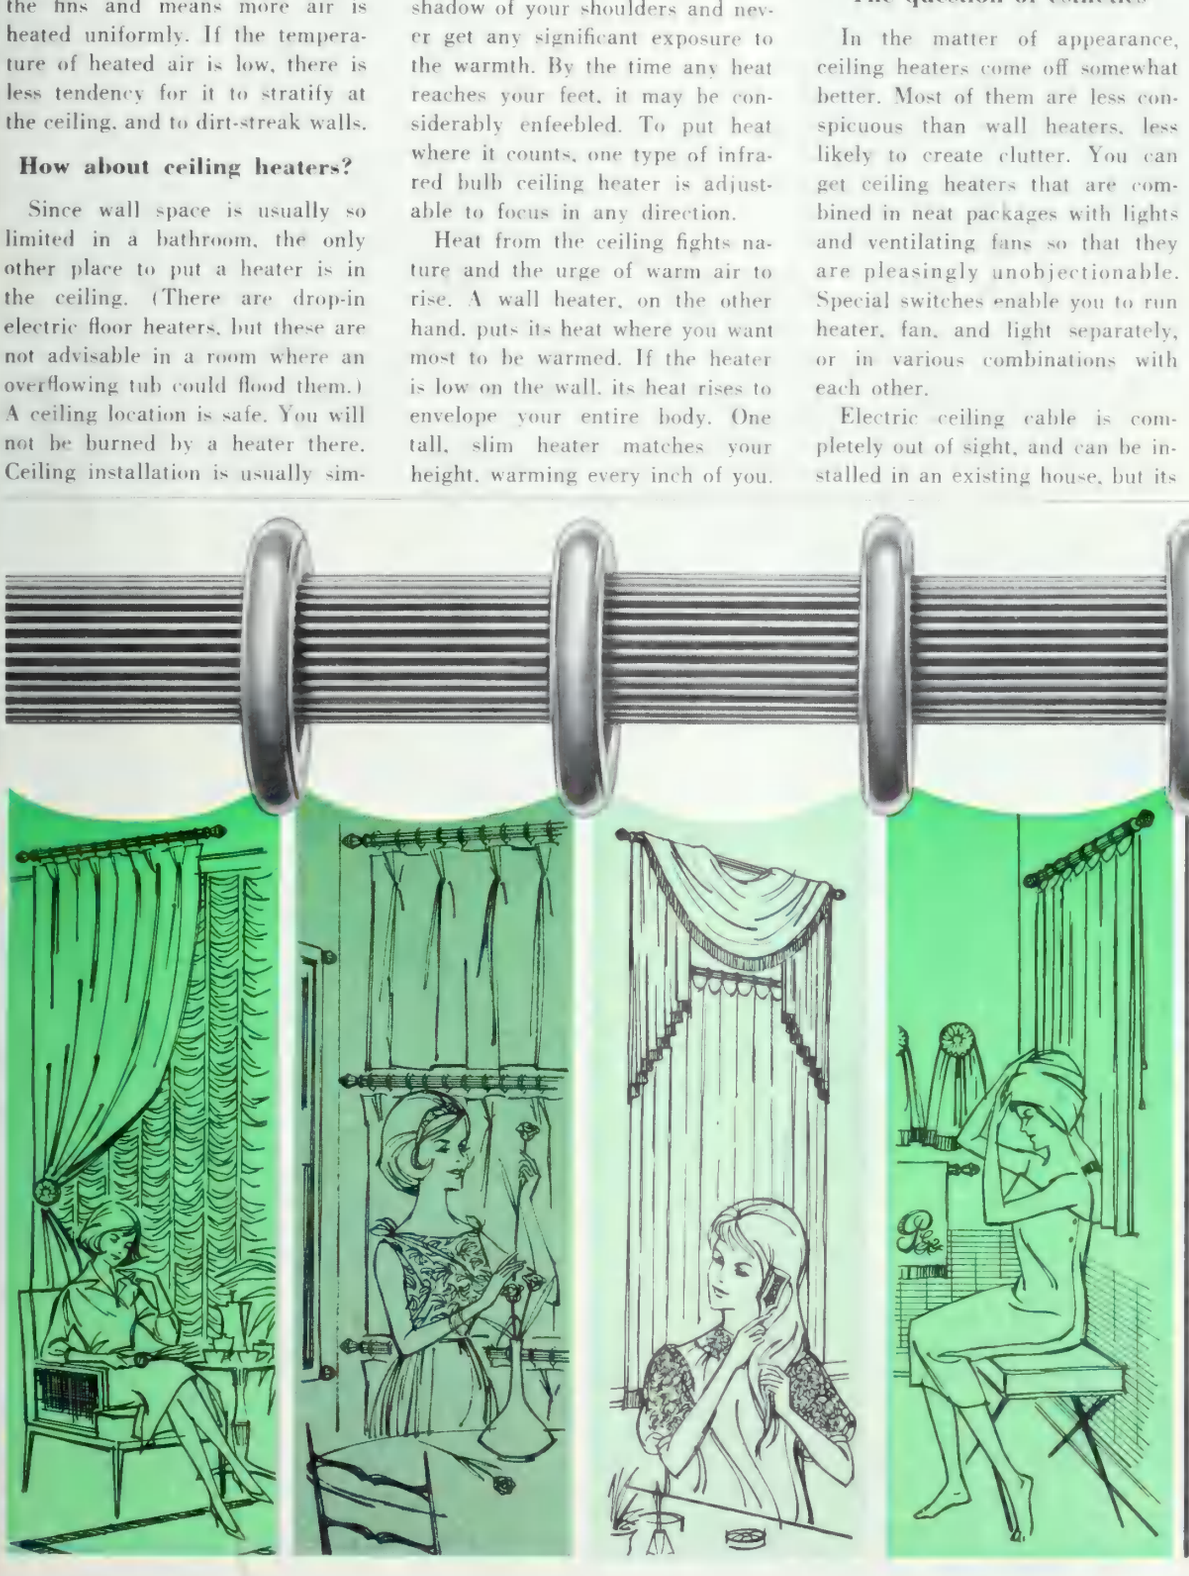
Heat from the ceiling fights nature and the urge of warm air to rise. A wall heater, on the other hand, puts its heat where you want most to be warmed. If the heater is low on the wall, its heat rises to envelope your entire body. One tall, slim heater matches your height, warming every inch of you.

Heat loss in a bathroom is greatest on its outside wall (or walls) and at windows. You radiate your own body heat to these cold surfaces. That's why the best placement of heating units is under windows and on outside walls. In addition to warming you, the heater warms these surfaces, and you no longer lose body heat to them. A warmed window is also less subject to moisture condensation. A ceiling heater isn't likely to warm your outside walls much, but in many cases your central heating system will have its outlet there, so the lack won't be as acute as it might otherwise be.

The question of esthetics

In the matter of appearance, ceiling heaters come off somewhat better. Most of them are less conspicuous than wall heaters, less likely to create clutter. You can get ceiling heaters that are combined in neat packages with lights and ventilating fans so that they are pleasingly unobjectionable. Special switches enable you to run heater, fan, and light separately, or in various combinations with each other.

Electric ceiling cable is completely out of sight, and can be installed in an existing house, but its slowness of response takes it out of the class of quick auxiliary heat. Easier to install are very thin panel heaters that are a sandwich of foil and plastic. They fit flatly and inconspicuously against the ceiling. In a bathroom, a more logical place for cable, if you consider it at all, is under the floor.



If you want to paint a heater (either ceiling or wall type) to make it blend better with your scheme, contact the manufacturer for recommendations. A special heat-resisting paint may be necessary.

Sound Control

Noise is also a factor to consider in selecting an electric heater. Whether you find the propeller noise of a fan heater objectionable depends on your sensitivity. Certainly the quiet hum of a low-velocity fan is far more pleasant than the creaking, snapping, and cracking sounds many heaters make as they warm up and cool down. "No moving parts" is definitely no guarantee of silent operation. Some fans make noise of another kind — radio and television hum. Be sure yours is guaranteed not to.

Thanks to hung mounting, many baseboard heaters aren't as noisy as they once were. It's rigid fastening that creates most expansion and contraction noises. In a proper installation, the mechanic will back off on the screws fastening the unit to the wall, so that there is give at this point as well.

Shopping tips

Don't buy a heater unless you see it operating. You can't judge it intelligently any other way. Turn it on and check how long it takes to warm up. Listen to the noises of its operation. Does its grill become merely too hot to touch, or will it burn you if you touch it? If it's a wall heater, its hottest area will be at its top.

Some wall heaters have fans that can be run separately for "summer cooling." What kind of volume of air does it deliver? Unless it is a completely separate fan from the one used for heating, it is not likely to do much good. A fan designed for heating has a constricted intake and outlet. The number of cubic feet of air it circulates per minute is pitifully few. A separate small electric fan will deliver at least four times as much.

Most electric heaters cost from $20 to $85. One of the least expensive is a radiant heater that employs 250-watt infrared bulbs. You can get a single-bulb unit for under $10. Installation cost for most heaters is usually from $15 to $40, but it may be nothing if you get a type that merely hangs on the wall and plugs into an existing outlet. If you have to cut open a wall to insert a heater, it will, of course, cost more than a heater that is surface-mounted. Is there a guarantee, and for how long? Better units have five-year backing, and don't cost proportionately more than ones guaranteed for only one year.

If you buy a heater that has no thermostat, you may have one added. Simplest and least expensive are the thermostats that work at "line voltage," the current just as it comes over the wire. These are less sensitive and accurate than quality low-voltage thermostats, which require a transformer. Where shall you mount the thermostat? On an inside wall. You can buy a combination thermostat and wall switch to replace an existing wall switch. One type includes a pilot light (to indicate if the heater is on) and a convenience outlet.

As an added fillip, you may want a remote-control switch for your bathroom heater in your bedroom. You can then turn on your heater in advance and have the bathroom cozily warm when you get there. This can be a particular comfort at times when the house heating plant is shut down or operating at a lower nighttime setting.

So that you won't forget to turn off your heater, particularly if it is not thermostatically controlled, you may have a timer switch. These can be set for any period up to an hour. ■ opened, all medical services were free. Economizing retirees got it all for as little as $1,200 down and $114 a month—by moving into a one-bedroom apartment. But even the very wealthy saw the value in Seal Beach's monthly payment.

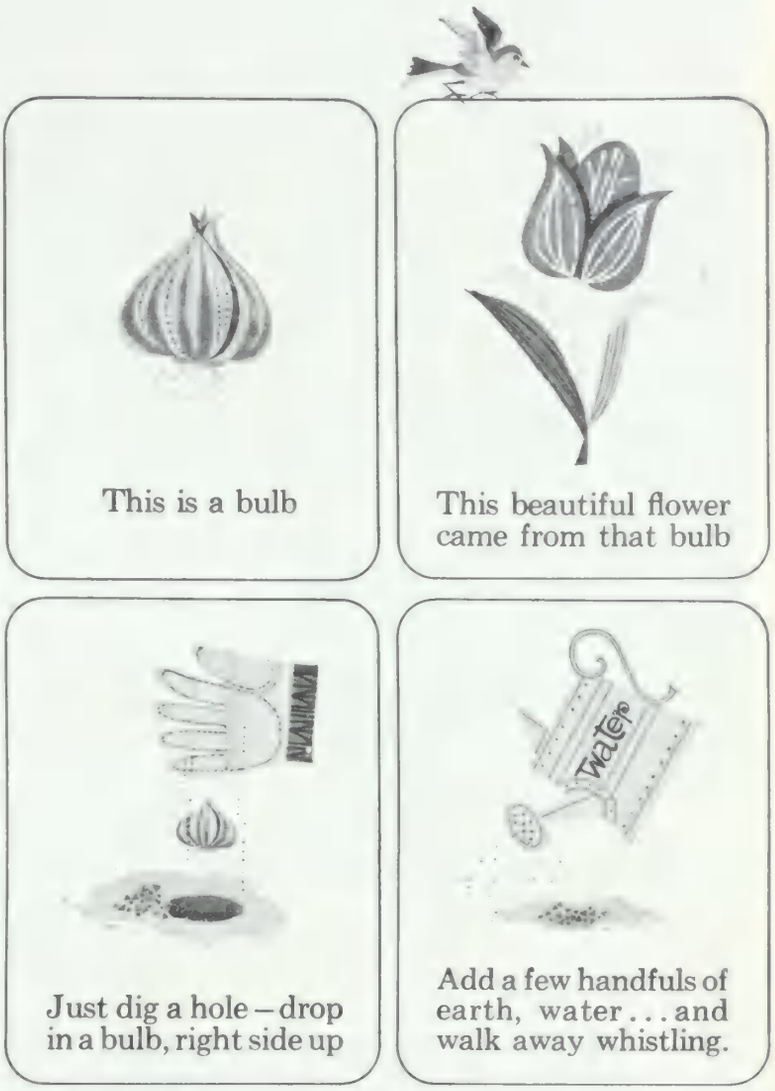
"They all thought it was Freesville," recalls a Leisure World executive. "We had figured that they'd make about six visits a year to their doctors. But as it turned out they went every month. They just abused the program." Seal Beach later voted to cut the medical plan back from 100 percent to 80 percent, leaving 20 percent to come out of residents' pockets. There was some grumbling. But the abuses stopped.

At Laguna Hills, 30 minutes from Disneyland, there will eventually be 18,000 garden apartments. Eleven different models sell for $11,095 to $12,395 for one bedroom and for $14,495 to $17,095 for two bedrooms. Down payments range from $1,380 to $1,546, and monthly payments are $145 to $185, depending upon the price of the apartment. Again, at no extra cost, residents get clubhouses—seven instead of three—an 1,800-seat auditorium, closed-circuit television in every apartment (for those who can't get to the auditorium), two olympic-size swimming pools, an 18-hole golf course, a stable of horses, a 120-acre shopping center, a library, a $12 million hospital (there is no hospital at Seal Beach), and a medical center staffed by 64 doctors, 162 nurses, and 275 other medical specialists. Again, residents pay only 20 percent of all medical bills, including visits to any doctor, nurses calls, drugs, and hospital care. The medical plan, underwritten by Blue Cross, is open to all Leisure Worldlings, without examination.

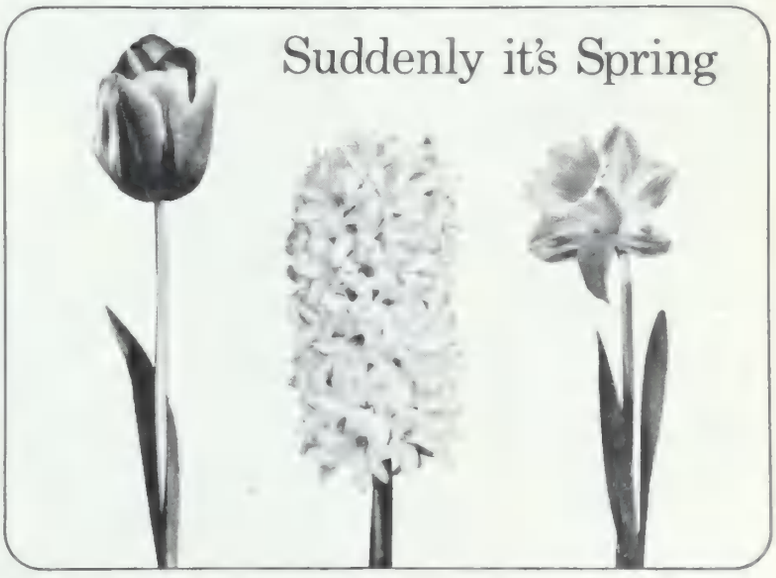
As in Seal Beach, all exterior building maintenance is free, and appliances are repaired and replaced without charge.

Laguna Hills, built on 2,465 acres of the old Moulton ranch, is only seven minutes from San Juan Capistrano. It will eventually attract 30,000 oldsters.

Inside all Leisure World apartments, attention is given to the occupants' age. Doorways are 36 inches wide, to let a wheel chair pass. Wall plugs are two feet off the floor and light switches are wrist high, to lessen bending and reaching. Kitchens are compact U-shapes, where sink, range, and refrigerator are only a step or two from each other. Ample cabinet space is within an arm's reach. And the range is about four inches lower than standard, which is a comfortable height from which to lift a pot. Dining areas are just a few steps away from this efficient food-preparation center.



Bathrooms are compartmented for privacy, and the tub is fitted with a seat to permit an elderly resident to enjoy a sitting-bath. Bars, set into the walls, help him to rise. Throughout, night lights guide him from room to room.



Despite all this, there is something missing at Seal Beach and Laguna Hills. Like most retirement villages, they lack architecture. Seal Beach is a monotonous series of identical apartment compounds, 12 units to a building, stark and unimaginative. From the air, it looks like a military installation, surrounded by a wall. At Laguna Hills, there is variety but little unity. Nothing ties the eleven designs together. As in most suburban tracts, Laguna Hills was first scraped clean and then replanted, as it were, with housing.

But Ross Cortese, who had to quit school at 16, was schooled enough in home-building to sense the omission. For his third project on the former Dollar ranch in Walnut Creek, 45 minutes from San Francisco, he called in top-flight architect Charles Warren Callister. This move has given builders of retirement communities an inspiration worth emulating and buyers an inkling of what they can have.

Callister has imbued the Dollar ranch with a mood and a feeling of tradition that every retirement community needs but few attain. His designs echo the architecture of cosmopolitan San Francisco. His formal lines are reminiscent of its oriental and Victorian appeal. As in San Francisco, where one is always conscious of hills and fog, so in Walnut Creek one is always conscious of the valley, of trees, and of nature itself. Callister's structures rise up the hills in perfect harmony with their scale and color. He did a fine land-planning job. But he also did a great color-styling job. An overall umber tone blends with the softness of the hillsides, the morning fog, and the oaks. A matchless setting of beauty is offered by the Robert Stanley

Dollar orchard and mansion, which Callister is remodeling into a museum and library.

But more important than all this, perhaps, is Callister's answer to the elderly's needs for companionship. He has grouped his garden apartments around courts and walkways, providing an excuse for a chance encounter. His arrangements make neighbors conscious of each other's routine (which is a safeguard an older person would understand).

But Callister has not forgotten privacy. His patios and lanais let a resident step directly from his home (even from his bedroom) into a secluded outdoor atrium or enclosed patio.

The design triumph of Callister and the business drive of Cortese will set the pace for all retirement communities in the future. Already Cortese himself has engaged top architects for his next projects. Collins and Kronstadt, for example, will give Norbeck, Maryland, a feeling of Williamsburg and Georgetown, while Royal Barry Wills Associates will suffuse the Princeton community with an air of northeast colonial.

Walnut Creek, like Laguna Hills and Seal Beach, is a cooperative. Buyers do not purchase their homes, but receive a share of stock in a corporation or mutual. Each mutual assumes the obligation for a 40-year FHA mortgage covering all the apartments in its area (generally around 400). Retirees also share in the operation of Leisure World through their membership in the Golden Rain Foundation, the nonprofit sponsor of each project. The Foundation owns all the community facilities and contracts with each mutual to maintain the apartments and the grounds. Each mutual elects its own resident officers whose votes determine policy for the Golden Rain Foundation at each community. (It was a vote of Seal Beach's Golden Rain Foundation officers that reduced the medical benefits from 100 percent to 80 percent.)

Here's how the cooperative is financed. Assume that a retiree moves into a minimum one-bedroom apartment at Walnut Creek. He pays $1,348 down and gets a share of stock worth $410. When he dies, this stock, with all its rights, reverts to his estate. His heirs can use it to move into Walnut Creek, if they're old enough, or they can sell it. The rest of the down payment goes to working capital for the cooperative ($463), for membership in the Golden Rain Foundation ($450), and for escrow ($25). After that, the retiree pays a minimum of $171 a month: $72.16 for mortgage principal, interest, and FHA insurance, $30.08 in local taxes, $34.31 for the medical plan which they'll all use, $7.71 for recreation, $8.76 for replacement reserves, and $18.18 for administration—$5 of which goes to the Leisure World Foundation, a sort of national amalgamation of Golden Rain Foundations.

These payments are increased proportionately for retirees who buy the higher-priced one-bedroom apartment, at $14,295 (down payment $1,393 and monthly payment $176), or the two-bedroom units which range from $15,995 to $18,095, with down payments of $1,502 to $1,636 and monthly costs of $190 to $207.50.

This cooperative plan offers a subtle fringe benefit. It gives the residents of each mutual control over the admission of residents. Undesirable residents can be asked to leave. And, thus far, one couple has—from Seal Beach. They were drunkards who refused help from Leisure World's medical plan.

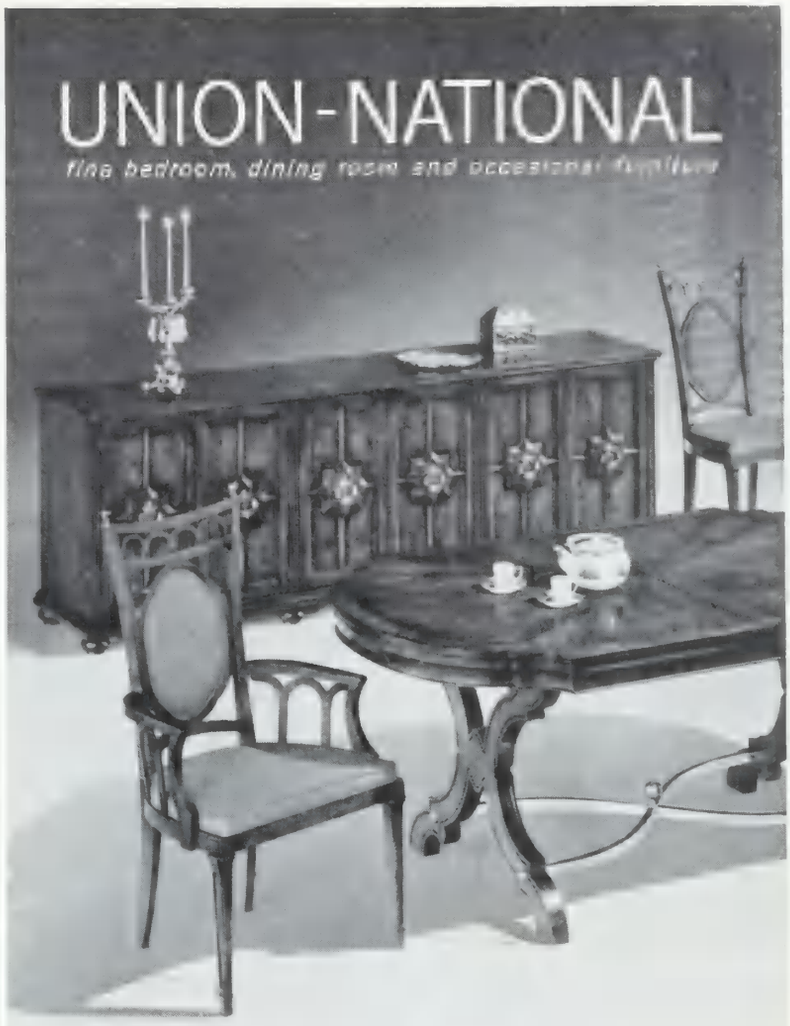
Use of FHA financing, of course, prohibits discrimination of Leisure World. But strangely, not a single Negro has applied for a home in any project, at this writing. Explains William G. Brangham, chief of sales for Leisure World: "Negroes don't seem to be attracted to this kind of community."

Few competing retirement developments use cooperative financing. But the popularity of sharing maintenance and facilities has given rise to another cooperative tool—the condominium. Under a condominium plan, buyers share only the golf courses, clubhouses, restaurants, and other common areas. They own their apartments individually. They may pay cash (something buyers can't do at Leisure World) or they may finance their apartments on a long-term mortgage loan.

In theory, the condominium plan is less risky for buyers than the cooperative. Buyers don't assume responsibility for apartments in which neighbors have defaulted on their payments. In a condominium, a defaulted apartment reverts to the lender, not to a corporation.

The condominium plan is offered by dozens of new retirement communities, among them Leisure Village, N.J. (with apartments priced between $12,500 and $18,500); Windsor Gardens in Denver ($10,900 to $30,000); Graystone in Salt Lake City ($17,500 to $38,000); Hacienda Carmel in Carmel-by-the-Sea, Calif. ($10,500 to $26,000); and Rancho Bernardo's Seven Oaks village near La Jolla, Calif. ($12,500 to $18,500).

Most retirement communities offer either houses for sale or apartments for rent. But some, like Del Webb's Sun Cities, offer a combination of houses for sale and cooperative apartments. At Sun City, Ariz., houses are priced at $11,250 to $18,995 and apartments $8,950 to $15,900. At Sun City, Fla., homes range from $12,800 to $18,350 and apartments from $9,450 to $13,950. But unlike Leisure World there are extra charges at the Sun Cities. For $22 a month extra, a resident gets free exterior house repairs and lawn maintenance. A newly instituted program offers three medical plans. One for $7 a month covers 80 percent of medical costs up to $200, plus other benefits. A supplemental plan for another $7 a month covers bills up to $15,000 with a $250 deductible clause. A similar supplemental plan for $10 has a $100 deductible clause. The program, underwritten by Continental Casualty Co., requires no medical examination.



In the long run, it is immaterial how a retirement project is financed. No program can assure success. And yet success is crucial to a retiree. He must make certain that the benefits he reads about in a brochure will materialize when he moves in. A sign in the dirt that says "future clubhouse" is of little value. Also, prospective residents must assess the quality of management. Will it deteriorate? Will lawns get cut? Will broken billiard cues be replaced? Will the costs of maintenance shoot up and taxes soar after a couple moves in, because the developer guessed wrong about monthly charges?

The danger inherent in every new retirement community is that it will run out of buyers when it is in the throes of development. Without a continuous flow of sales, a developer will be hard pressed to complete golf courses, clubhouses, and medical buildings. One large project south of Los Angeles started out with a bang when it was launched in 1959, but sales dried up two years later. Buyers complained of perfunctory management. Many residents lost hope and tried to sell their homes. Eventually ownership of the project changed, and management improved. To revive sales, new owners reduced age limit from 50 to 45.

Other projects in Florida and California have gone bankrupt because of slow sales, leaving hundreds of elderly residents stranded amid deteriorating clubhouses and golf courses riddled with weeds.

There is no way to guard against these catastrophes. In fact, the great boom in retirement communities has an ominous sound. There are so many communities planned, especially on the West Coast, that competition for sales will be fierce. Thousands of retirees who chose an ill-conceived project risk being trapped in misery. The best advice may be: Choose only a retirement community that is nearly complete, where all the facilities are available. Don't be fooled by glowing sales talk. Retirement developers are really just home builders looking for sales. You might say the retirement housing trend is nothing more than a gimmick to sell houses—designed and grouped in ways different from houses built

The kitchens in the Leisure World apartments at Walnut Creek are designed for simplicity of meal preparation. The arrangement of the equipment varies depending on the floor plan selected, but most of designs are U-shape with all appliances within easy reach.

But even before a maturing couple considers a retirement community, let them make certain that they are suited for spending the rest of their lives in the exclusive company of old people. For many people this is a distasteful prospect. A survey of 1,000 people over 45 in four large cities by Sanford R. Goodkin, West Coast researcher, shows "formidable resistance" to retirement communities.

Dr. Paul Starr, emeritus professor of medicine at the University of Southern California insists that it is detrimental to incarcerate the elderly with their own generation. "It is not good psychologically or physically," he says.

Frank Mackle, president of Deltona Corp., which is building a large community in Florida, recalls that, "We tried to segregate old people from young people back in 1956. It just didn't work. They didn't like it. Another problem," says Mackle, "is providing services. It takes at least five people to serve every ten retired people. But if you keep out the young, you simply cut yourself off from your labor supply." (Cortese gets around this by locating his Leisure Worlds near the larger metropolitan labor centers.)

USC Sociologist Mrs. Clair Graham has said that the retirement community is for those who are sick. "People who live and stay there will probably die there."

This last invective underscores one of the problems of the retirement community. Promoted under the banner of providing a new way of life, the community actually offers a new way of dying—oftentimes separated from family and old friends. A visitor to Arizona wrote recently, "During my ten days in Sun City, I was constantly reminded of the presence of sickness and death." A visitor to Laguna Hills is somewhat startled by the patient Cadillac ambulance parked behind a row of apartments. But the salesman hastens to note that the ambulance is a welcome sight to elderly residents. "It is a sign that help is never far away," he says.

But it is clear that retirement communities don't appeal to everyone. Says Francis W. Looney, executive secretary of Massachusetts' Council for the Aging: "We feel that there is no set answer to the problem of housing the elderly.

Some people like to live in their old neighborhoods, some prefer to retire to communities where they'll find only people of their own age," —where they feel they are not in competition with young people.

Says Sociologist Graham, about Palm City, "I sat in the model homes and listened to the comments of people thinking of buying. Very obviously there's a split: either they just love it or they come in and say, 'Isn't it ghastly.' "

ALTHOUGH retirement communities are intended to cure loneliness, some couples, especially those who have traveled there from afar, find themselves longing for home. Says a Massachusetts wife who moved to California's Seal Beach: "I'm so homesick I could die. I wake up with nightmares and I guess the neighbors think my husband's killing me. I miss my grandchildren. When I write letters, I cry."

But for most retirees, a big, well-run retirement community can be the last stop before paradise. Says a 68-year-old widower at Sun City, Ariz., "This is the place for me. I never was in a friendlier place in my life." Coos the wife of a 60-year-old man, "My husband was always shy. He never used to talk to anyone. Now he talks to everybody. He's changed so much."

Sun City, it is true, provides a friendliness that is difficult to resist. For example, a monthly newsletter holds out this invitation from Richard and Viola Hammond of Garreth, Ind., who "very much want to get acquainted" with Sun Citians when they arrive: "We will be home at 10528 Camden Ave., and the welcome mat will be out."

At Sun City and Seal Beach, there is a constant buzz of activity that makes retirees feel young again. "We're the biggest bunch of delinquents you've ever seen," says a woman at Seal Beach. "My husband makes the rounds of all three clubhouses at night to see what's going on—and he goes around first thing in the morning to make sure they didn't disappear over night."

At Sun City, an activity calendar is so crammed full of bridge games, dances, and club meetings that it turns recreation into a six-day week. Retirement communities are so active, in fact, that one wonders: Is all this really pointless busyness befitting the nation's mature citizens? Is old age to be just one endless pursuit of happiness—a fretful struggle to keep the mind from brooding about death? When a visitor muses on this theme, he's quickly told that there are cultural activities at retirement communities, too. Port St. Lucie in Florida has two adult "colleges" in operation, one an extension of Indian River Junior College. In one season it graduated 87 residents who had studied Spanish, art, landscaping, writing, speed reading, and gardening. Seal Beach Education Director Fred Roehm reports that the current semester's program is filled to capacity, with oldsters studying history, mosaics, painting, sculpture, psychology, Spanish, sewing, writing, and finance.

But despite this evidence, the vast majority of retirees never do get around to those books they've always wanted to read, or take up painting as they wanted to. In fact, the atmosphere at retirement communities mitigates against it. In a candid talk with a New Yorker reporter, a Sun City executive explains why this is so: "I think . . . [retirees] have been doing what you call constructive things all their lives, and they're just fed up. They don't want any more of it . . . We do those things that society tells us to do for societal reasons, not out of the feeling that we really want to. What's productive is what's productive by society's standards. And the way of living of the Sun Citians raises questions about the validity of those standards. The people in Sun City may think that the way they can contribute most to society is by living their lives independently and not being a burden on their children, or anybody else. And they may be right," he added.

Retirement communities are actually creating their own standards for retirement. They are turning it into a time when men and women with different memories and contrasting levels of economic achievement throw off their reserve and join the same social club. For many, a retirement community will bring a new life—not an end to life. The 65 marriages at Sea Beach testify to this.

MATURING adults may still wish to test a retirement community before they move into it. Sun City lets an undecided retiree rent for 30 days—$150 during an off-season month and $275 during a winter month. Retirement communities located in metropolitan areas give a buyer a chance to move in before he retires. At Windsor Gardens in Denver, 85 percent of the residents still work and about 20 percent at Seal Beach still work. Many developers insist that they are not building "retirement communities," but "adult communities" because of this strong desire to keep working among many people who have reached retirement age.

Another consideration is the age minimum. Most retirement communities set an age requirement for only one member of a married couple. Thus, at Windsor Gardens the husband, for example, must be at least 50, but the wife, says developer Werner Livingston, can be any age.

THE same is true at the Sun Cities. But Leisure World executives point out that they want no young women running around their projects—no matter who they're married to. It makes older wives uncomfortable. At Ross Cortese's Leisure Worlds, everyone must be at least 52.

For younger homeowners who want to give up their large home after the last child has moved on—to marriage or college—there are retirement developments that set virtually no age limit. Palm City, Calif., is open to anyone 45 or older. Another project in Torrance, Calif., is open to anyone who has reached 35. And in Scottsdale, Ariz., adults can move into Casa Monterey at any age, as long as they don't bring children under 18. Builder David Friedman reports that many of his buyers have sold houses worth $50,000 to $100,000 and moved into his $20,000 Spanish town houses.

Where adults still want to try out retirement living—but cannot avoid bringing the children along—there is a vast array of possibilities. Frank Mackles' 15,000-acre development at Deltona, Fla., is one. At this huge project there is no age limit—though the average age of residents is around 50. In the Arkansas Ozarks, there's Cherokee Village, a vacation-home project where prospective buyers are encouraged to think of their second home as a future retirement home. The average age in Cherokee Village is 45. On the Atlantic Coast, the same vacation-retirement combination is available at Tuckerton, N.J., where Mystic Islands provides fishing and boating to families from New York and Philadelphia. About 25 percent of the buyers here are retired. And in California, on Lake Tahoe's northern shore, Incline Village offers housing sites starting at $6,500 (with $39,000 the minimum price for lots on the lake) and houses priced between $24,000 and $29,000, and also condominium apartments from $32,500 to $35,500. Custom houses range between $100,000 and $150,000. Incline Village will have a golf course, swimming pools, and eventually a hospital. At present, about five percent of the buyers are retired.

Builder F. M. Donelson has found that 60 percent of his buyers at Hide-a-Way Hills near Columbus were thinking of retirement when they decided to purchase their homes.

For the vacationer who likes Hawaii, the Kauai Surf Hotel sells cottages for $17,000 down and $28,000 more in five years. The buyer uses the cottage during the off-season, getting free maid service while he's there, and lets the hotel lease the cottage for 10 seasons. The buyer gets a 25-percent cut of the rents and, after 10 years, moves into the cottage, which by then has become his retirement home.

VARIATIONS on this theme are available through scores of Caribbean hotels as well as other Hawaiian islands.

A retiree who wants something different every year can check with builder William A. James, who's building retirement developments in Myrtle Beach, S.C., and Knoxville, Tenn., with others planned for Norfolk, Palm Beach, St. Petersburg, and Hot Springs. A resident in any one of these developments can skip around to all the others through an exchange program.

One other developer, Irvin Kahn, plans to offer the same exchange benefit for retirees at his projects in California and Maui, Hawaii. Ross Cortese also plans an exchange program for his projects, which will shuttle restless retirees between Europe, Hawaii, and the U.S.

For oldsters who can't keep up with this pace, there are retirement developments, such as the 10,000-acre Tucson Green Valley, which plan nursing homes. Finally, Meadow Lakes Village, in Hightstown, N.J., offers a 100-percent medical plan. All doctor bills, nursing facilities, hospitalization, and even meals are included in a single monthly payment, starting at $205. Residents get a lifetime lease to their apartment, but generate no equity. When they leave or die, their apartment reverts to the development. ■

How to silence NOISY PLUMBING

■ Plumbing that whistles, rattles, and thumps is trying to tell you something. Learn what its noises mean, and you're halfway to silencing them. Each noise is a symptom of an ailment.

Chattering or whistling by a faucet usually means a loose washer or a worn part. The loose washer brings on chattering by alternately stopping and freeing water when the faucet is almost—but not completely—shut off. The remedy is to disassemble the faucet and tighten the screw holding the washer. If the interior faucet assembly is worn and fits loosely, replace it.

Water-closet whistling

Water-closet noises usually consist of high-pitched whistles when the tank is filling. Often this whistling originates in the float valve, the device that regulates the flow of water into the tank. The trouble is usually corrected by increasing the flow through the valve, typically by turning a knurled nut. Sometimes it is necessary to loosen a set screw before the flow adjustment can be changed.

The washer in the water closet's float valve may give the same trouble as a washer on a sink faucet. It may cause the closet to dribble water instead of shutting off tight after filling. It isn't difficult to take this valve apart and replace the washer, but be sure the water is shut off first. Sometimes it's the ball float that's causing the trouble. It may be waterlogged and therefore not exert enough upward pressure on the float arm to shut the valve off. Unscrew the ball and rattle it. If water is sloshing around inside it, get a new ball.

A low, humming sound often indicates that water is running into the closet bowl after the tank has been filled. Jiggling may stop it. Usually the fault lies with a worn stopper ball down at the bottom of the tank. A new ball is the prescribed remedy, but the seat on which the ball rests may also need cleaning and smoothing with an emery cloth.

If the tank fills with a great rushing and splashing of water, it usually means the "hush-tube" has broken off. This is a tube that directs the inflow of water to the bottom of the tank, instead of letting it drop like a miniature waterfall. This tube is easily replaced.

The stack (drain line) of a second-floor bathroom may make embarrassingly loud noises where it passes through a downstairs wall. Installation of a quieter-flushing water closet helps. Basically, this is a problem that should be dealt with when the house is built. If possible, avoid placement of stacks in living-area walls, and insulate copper stacks by wrapping them with hair felt or other sound deadeners. Cast-iron stacks and drain lines are naturally quiet and are seldom cause for concern.

Heater rumbling

Rumbling and pounding is sometimes heard in water heaters. If a heater is not properly protected by a safety-relief valve or if a thermostat is malfunctioning, overheated water can make quite a racket as well as present explosion danger. It's a signal to call the plumber.

Heater noises also come from piping that retards circulation. Such faulty piping results in hot water's being forced into the tank in spurts when pressure builds behind it. Remedies include improved placement of connections, larger pipe sizes, and replacement or cleaning of clogged pipes and heating coil.

Water hammer

Water hammer noise — the pounding of pipes and shuddering of fixtures—is caused by the shock wave created when the water flow is suddenly stopped by an abrupt closing of a faucet. If allowed to continue, water hammer may result in serious damage to plumbing and appliances. To correct this problem, it is often necessary to add several short, vertical, closed-end pipes to the system. Forming air chambers, these pipes act as cushions to absorb excessive pressure produced by sudden flow stoppage.

If there already are air chambers in the plumbing system, they may be waterlogged. These often may be restored to good condition by shutting off the water supply and then opening all house faucets. If the air chambers are one size larger than the water pipes, they'll drain without difficulty. If they are the same size, it may be necessary to remove their end caps before the water will drain out.

There are several commercially made shock absorbers which serve the same purpose as air chambers. They take up less space, and may be easier to install in an existing house. Sometimes hammering is caused by excessively high water pressure (over 80 pounds). A pressure-reducing valve may be used to remedy this condition.

Water hammer may also be reduced by bracing the affected piping. Where a pipe makes a 90° turn, back it up with a board or other support. It will help cushion the impact made by the water when it hits the curve.

Whistling pipes

Whistling noises are produced by water traveling through pipes at high speed. High water speed is characteristic of piping that has become partially clogged by rust or mineral deposits. The cure is to replace the faulty pipes or add one or more loop lines to bypass the clogged pipes and take the water to distant fixtures by a more direct route.

In new houses, high water speed and whistling occur where pipe size is inadequate or where water moves from larger to smaller piping. Often the problem may be eliminated by installing a pressure-reducing valve, though it is sometimes necessary to replace the smaller-size pipe.

Floors and walls tend to amplify pipe noises. For this reason it is best to avoid direct piping contacts with them. Where there is contact, it should be cushioned with rubber padding.

Vibrating water lines

Pipe chattering is probably the simplest piping noise to correct. Long lengths of piping not fastened to a joist or beam may vibrate, causing this annoyance. The solution is simply to secure those unsupported portions with straps or hangers. If a well pump is transmitting operational noise through the piping, a non-rigid coupling will do much to break up the vibration. Or it may be time to install a new, quieter pump.

Loud drains

If water rushes out of a sink drain with a great sucking sound, it indicates the fixture's trap is being siphoned. The usual cause is improper venting, or no venting at all. All drains should have vents—openings to the air. Otherwise it's like pouring liquid out of a narrow-necked bottle. Where installation of a correct vent would require a major plumbing overhaul, some codes permit installation of an "anti-siphon trap" to end this nuisance.

Plumbing manufacturers today design fixtures and equipment to be as noiseless as possible. Much noise once associated with plumbing has been eliminated through research engineering. Still, the single most important factor in providing noiseless plumbing is adequately sized piping. Modern, silent fixtures can't help much if the builder skimps on this. Larger piping gives better water supply and makes no noisy fuss about it.

If you have problems, call a reputable plumbing contractor. He's best qualified to give the final word on what must be done. ■

He also likes the informality of dress and manner that goes with having a couple of other families over for a meal. At the end of a hard day or week's work, he wants to relax with friends, not have to be "wound up" and started off again, as he describes the preparations for an elaborate affair. It's more effort than it's worth, he claims, and so we rarely do it. In this regard, I believe he is typical of his sex and age group.

And lastly, he genuinely enjoys the company of the younger family members as well as that of their parents. He likes singing to and playing with all youngsters. He relishes the radical talk of rebellious teenagers and the ambitious goals of young adults. In substance, we both like keeping the communication lines open between our generation and our children's generation. We find this can be done easily and effectively when families get together for dinner and the conversational give-and-take that such occasions offer.

For my part, I may be following the line of least resistance, but I find that these family parties are much easier on a housewife-hostess than any other form of entertaining. By dinnertime, I don't find myself on the verge of physical and nervous exhaustion from marketing, flower-arranging, table-setting, and coordinating caterers; and yet there is no lessening of my party standards. The food is as superb as I can make it, the table setting as attractive as possible. The only difference is that when we invite these people, we include their children, too, if they'd care to come. As soon as an invitation is put on a family basis, I find the party mood is warmer, less pretentious, and less strained. I am not trying to astound other critical and talented hostesses. I don't feel obliged to "prove" anything by my dress or the party motif, or with celebrity guests. We're simply getting together with a few nice families for a good meal and a good time.

As a mother who sometimes feels as if she's on a medieval rack being pulled in four directions at once, such unity of entertaining has great merit. Although the household is geared for party preparations, my attention isn't divided between children and company. There aren't the usual two servings. No one has to be driven anywhere right at dinnertime. We're all eating the same meal, at the same time, and at home! Because it's a family party, all are willing to help with planning, preparations, and serving. All have an interest in making the day a success, so they're on their best behavior, being charming and hospitable.

But perhaps my strongest endorsement of family entertaining is a sentimental one. I know that the years for having such gatherings are numbered. There is a perfect period when the children are old enough to be self-sufficient and yet young enough to be content to stay home, and we seem to be in this phase. Ours aren't going steady, aren't married, away at college, in the Peace Corps, or bored with the rest of their family. In fact, after going to school and racing to extracurricular activities all through the week, they are happy to stay home on a weekend, providing friends can be with them. Like it or not, I know that these precious years are few and I mean to make the most of them.

Our children's enthusiasm for the various types of family parties we now enjoy are sentimental, too. There is a nostalgic quality that harks back to when they were very small and we arranged get-togethers with other young families for a Fourth of July celebration, a beach picnic, a summer barbecue, or cookout. Of course, our youngsters loved these child-centered activities. Later on, when the boys got into Sunday school, scouting, and Little League, it seemed quite natural and easy to suggest that several teammates with parents follow us home for a victory or (depending on the circumstances) consolation dinner. The children were always delighted with these impromptu affairs.

When the children were young, we would also refuse most invitations to spend the day on a friend's boat, at a beach house, or on a farm, saying, "We'd rather not leave the children for a whole Saturday or Sunday." Often we were told to bring them along as companions for the host's children. When this worked well, we reciprocated. In a rather unpremeditated way, family entertaining became a part of our youngsters' childhood.

Now that we deliberately plan such parties (there are plenty that are still spur-of-the-moment), the children are in favor of this form of fun because it's a party that isn't a party. They can have a few friends at the house but the responsibility of entertaining them isn't theirs alone. The party isn't subject to success or failure in the eyes of their contemporaries, yet they are hosts and hostesses. It's a carefree time for them, too.

Just as they enjoy their friends' company, our children have favorites among our older and younger guests. For instance, they all adore our lawyer. "Dan's a cat," is their stamp of approval. They like some of my kooky women friends and openly admire a number of their father's professional associates, and they particularly enjoy certain of the smaller fry. Whenever I'm temporarily stumped for a nicely balanced guest list, they suggest one of their favorite adults or a family with amusing youngsters.

There is a lot to be said for the mixing of age groups socially. Our teenagers are entranced by the neighbor's talkative three-year-old because he's bright and bilingual. Our thirteen-year-old twins are fascinated whenever the family with the eight-year-old twins comes for dinner because the younger set makes a point of wearing our pair's out-grown, matching outfits. "I can't believe I was once that small," says our son. Of course, the younger twins idolize our two, and that creates a situation that's pretty irresistible. By the same token, should an older child come with his parents, our three soak up his words of wisdom about college life, foreign travel, and—love. Any one of a number of family combinations makes for a lively and lovely sort of entertaining. As long as our whole family continues to enjoy it, we'll continue to do it.

So much for the whys of family entertaining. The wherefores cover all the ingredients necessary for making the party run smoothly—such important factors as whom to invite, what to do, and how much to serve.

IDEALLY, the only kind of families to invite would be those with witty, congenial parents who are your dearest friends and whose children are your children's closest pals. But this is a million-to-one shot, and doesn't occur often enough to permit very many family parties. The next best choice is to ask the adults whom you want to see and who also have nice kids. I've noticed that well-brought-up youngsters can mix with any age, whether they're very well acquainted or not. But as soon as your own children show signs of feeling imposed upon from having to entertain too many of your friends' children, let them invite a family whom you may not know well, but whose children are their buddies. Let them invite several extra young friends. The more variety, the better the party.

Other times I make a point of asking a father and children when his wife is away. I try to remember the children when both parents are out of town. I like having young couples who are openly apprehensive about having children of their own. I can recall several who have changed their minds about not wanting a girl, after meeting our feminine-looking, tomboy daughter. Then I often sprinkle in a guest or two whom I want our children to know outside of their professional capacity. People like their father's boss, our doctor, and teachers of all sorts are what I have in mind. By the same token, it isn't a bad idea for these professionals to get acquainted with us outside of professional hours. It leads inevitably — and happily — to better working relationships.

What to do with guests of varying ages and interests troubles some hostesses when I mention my predilection for family entertaining. This is no problem, I find, if you invite lively guests. Alert, humorous adults make their own entertainment by their provocative conversation and intelligent listening. Lively children will find their level of fun every time, by exploring your premises, trying out your youngsters' toys, or curling up with an available book.

We are an athletic family, though, so in good weather we urge friends to come early in the day to play tennis and swim. Their children may join in or start a volleyball or soft-ball game, or maybe hide-and-seek. Of course, friends with boats, beach cottages, ranches, or just a place in the country need no director of social activities. There is so much to do in those beautiful, natural settings that it's almost better to sit and watch the others while you enjoy nature.

In unseasonable seasons we draw heavily on our musically talented friends. Those who like to play the piano and dance, strum a guitar and sing folk songs form the nucleus of our parties. The children find these evenings "wild." They may stay with the older group, if they like, or drift off to other rooms. Where we live in Los Angeles, many families show a film after dinner or play stereo recordings or simply discuss the state of the world. I repeat that what to do is no problem when you have guests that spark one another. But if, by some miscalculation, you should find yourself stuck with a party of duds, my advice is to round up the kiddies and all play charades.

WHAT to serve these family groups is no real problem, either. It is a bit different from what you'd plan for adults alone. You can forget the sweet-breads, beef tongue, kidney pie, and most au vin dishes. On the other hand, I frequently introduce an unusual vegetable when guests are coming, because I've found that our three won't refuse to try the dish in front of company and inadvertently they may learn to like it.

In general, however, I start with hors d'oeuvres quite soon after the guests arrive. There is nothing as reliable as food for making the younger guests feel welcome. I serve combinations of raw vegetables, mild dips, nuts, cocktail frankfurters. As a main course I like something that practically cooks itself, unless we're barbecuing—and then my husband is in command. Roast turkey, brisket of beef, leg of lamb, ham, lasagna, and beef tenderloin all fit this description. I put them into the oven and forget them until I want to serve dinner. With the main course, a tossed salad and a delicious bread are quite enough. Although, as I said earlier, I occasionally experiment with vegetable dishes like Neopolitan squash, eggplant Parmesan, sweet and sour cabbage, I'm quite prepared to have them rejected by wary youngsters.

When it comes to dessert, it should be as spectacular as possible. Strawberry shortcake, baked Alaska, chocolate soufflé, crepes suzette, meringue glacé are some of the popular choices in our house. After the sweets, the children are excused and the parents linger over coffee.

One last tip about the food. If the other mothers offer to bring the salad or dessert, say yes. More than likely they'll feel caught up in the spirit of the family fun. Then when they decide to return the invitation it won't appear to be quite so formidable an undertaking, knowing that another cook may assist with the dinner.

If you're nervous about your furnishings, the carpets, upholstery, potted plants, etc., forget the family party idea. If you're the kind of hostess who will be sick if someone spills their milk or leaves fingerprints or rearranges the objets d'art, your discomfort will be sensed and no one will have a very good time. Better to take the family groups to a club or public park.

A false joviality or effusive hospitality is also easily detected by the children. Calling them "angel" and then ushering them into some remote room won't work, either. If you aren't going to let parents and children mix and mingle, forget it. You're missing the point of the party. The chances are that the younger generation doesn't want to stay near their elders, but as soon as you forcefully segregate them, they'll insist on staying underfoot. Leave it to your own children to take the lead and play apart from the adult group. The other youngsters will soon want to join their own set. I sometimes seat them at a separate table if there are too many of them. They rarely complain.

Unhappily, your own children may seize the opportunity to misbehave in front of company. They may show off, act wild and silly, or start sibling fights because they're relatively sure of not being punished in front of your friends. Any such naughty, mischievous behavior may strike the other children as hilariously funny, but it's embarrassing to you and the other grown-ups. Therefore, talk things over in advance with your youngsters and map out a code of behavior for the coming party. Explain that it's essentially an adult affair but it can be fun for all. Insist on an armistice on all teasing and fighting, or there's no sense in trying to entertain at home.

The shoe may be on the other foot, if you're unlucky enough to get a little demon with an otherwise delightful family. There are these fiendish types who maul the animals, who are mean to the other little guests, who lose their tempers and throw tantrums and anything else they can grab, who want everything they see and scream to take it home with them. Such children are problems. Be happy they're not yours. If their parents can't handle them, don't include them in your family parties again.

Young sophisticates can be a pain in the neck, too, but they are more comical than maddening. Some of them will test your fortitude by ordering a drink as you're serving their parents. A firm reply of "When you're twenty-one and the law allows me to" will put an end to that gambit. As for the bored, blasé adolescents who stay aloof from the group, treat them as you would an adult and tell them they may run along right after dinner, if they have a late date.

The rewards and pleasures that accrue from such gay goings-on are numerous and self-evident once you begin this family entertaining. The most obvious benefit is that you're teaching your children how to be gracious and hospitable, poised and aware in any social situation. You can do this by simply plunging them into the party preparations with you. For example, I consult mine on possible families to be included, the menu, the best day, and any criticisms they may have. I also expect them to help—to tidy up the yard, set the tables, fill the soft-drink cooler, and be generally useful. During a party, they know how to initiate a conversation, draw out an introvert, and they are often aware of frictions before I am and can step in to smooth things over. Afterwards when we receive thank-you notes, they get kudos, too. ■

17 IDEAS FOR A BETTER BATH

The unsightly drainpipe has a way of ruining appearances, especially in small bathrooms such as the one above. In addition to its ugly appearance, it also monopolizes space that could be better used. Here a special container was fabricated to solve both problems. It shields the area and holds a complete supply of cleaning equipment. Henry Zenke, owner-designer.

Drip-dry fabrics have made new demands on the bathroom as a place for hanging wet clothing with special laundry requirements. The stately cabinet at left is one way to bring order to a situation that is often chaotic. Various garments hang out of sight behind louvered doors. Cotton carpet that absorbs moisture is used in the bottom of the cabinet. Curtain rods can be moved easily for clothes of different lengths (see drawing). Henry Zenke, owner-designer.

years old. The fuller, fruitier red Burgundies come around more quickly, and are often excellent drinking after as little as five or six years—Beaujolais earlier still. Most people drink too-young wine because they cannot have anything older for reasonable prices—especially in restaurants. But the standards of restaurants, which nearly always buy "off the peg" rather than lay down for reserve, should not be applied to the home. Nor need we copy the commercial drive to sell wines early and so turn over the capital employed.

For the wine amateur, the answer —for the sake of the pocket as well as for pleasure in drinking—must be a cellar. Then, allowing for a reasonable allowance of mature or nearly mature wines, one can begin laying down wine for a decade ahead. For that is the period that, without considerable annual cash outlay, is needed to build up a representative reserve for average requirements of the enthusiastic wine drinker. It is surprising how quickly the years pass, particularly the second half of the decade.

The problems of storage, often imagined to be insuperable under urban living conditions, are not in fact so important. Nearly all wine merchants will keep customers' wine at little or no charge. Most houses and apartments have at least a cupboard that can be sufficiently insulated to protect wines from too violent changes in temperature. (This and vibration and light are the worst things for wine.) Of course, a cool, dark, underground cellar is best, but with a little careful anticipation of what is to be drunk at home over six months or a year, it is quite possible to build up a wine reserve elsewhere. Few wines need more than a week or two of rest after being moved.

The first questions to be answered by the amateur cellarer are what kinds of wine and how much of each? Naturally the answer must partly depend upon personal taste, but as a broad generalization it is red rather than white wines that require laying down in the true sense of being binned away for a period of years. Of course, the finer wines of great German vintages repay keeping, and the leading Sauternes improve with age. Fine white Burgundies may well be bought early. This is the best way of securing wines that tend to be sold and drunk up quickly. But red wines are the basis of any wine reserve, particularly Bordeaux and red Burgundies; Ports will be discussed later.

The problem of quantity is a difficult one, and it is bound up with the matter of variety. There are those who like to find a wine that suits them and then drink it regularly and almost exclusively at their own table. I recall a famous physician who liked to drink daily a bottle of Bordeaux. When he found an agreeable but minor Fronsac of about five years of age, he bought 40 dozen and proceeded to work through them. I never heard whether he reached his 480th bottle, but to my mind this is a dull way of imbibing and misses nearly all the potential pleasure and variety of wine drinking.

To the wine amateur the poor bottle and the lesser wine may be as interesting if not as enjoyable as far superior wines. Although there is a certain Bordeaux that I nearly always buy—it is good vintage, excellent year after year—nevertheless I take care not to order too much of it and so limit my choice elsewhere.

When I first started collecting wine seriously, caution and cash limitations confined my order to six bottles of a wine, but soon this became insufficient. For one thing, you cannot wait for a wine's full maturity before opening a bottle; it should be tried every now and again. A few half-bottles ordered at the same time as the bottles are a good idea for this. So I tended to increase my laying-down order to a dozen bottles and have stuck at this number, unless the wine was very expensive or for some reason a smaller number was more suitable. Of an older wine, half a dozen bottles may well be sufficient in relation to other wines held. Occasionally I have exceeded my dozen quota for young wines, and recently I have added two or three magnums of a particularly fine Bordeaux. A dozen may not seem a large amount, but if one has dozens of nine or ten Bordeaux of one vintage and then adds a similar quantity of red Burgundy and reserves of other wines, the accumulation and the expenditure become quite considerable. After a few years of collecting, it is surprising how long it takes to get round the cellar.

Other factors in determining quantity are of course the frequency of drinking and the way one likes to serve wine. When more than the equivalent of one bottle is to be served, I prefer to serve two different wines rather than two bottles of the same one: it is more interesting that way. For those who entertain frequently and with more than half a dozen guests, the maximum number per bottle, a dozen bottles of wine would be quite inadequate for laying down.

Having decided on the average quantity to be purchased, how soon after a vintage should the wine be bought? The answer almost certainly is the sooner the better, and in Britain that generally means after about three years. The growing demand for fine wine, which is limited in supply, and the modern economics of the wine trade result in very early ordering by all interested parties. Already some of the more favored 1959 classed-growth Bordeaux, only five years old and about three years in bottle, are no longer easily to be found on British wine merchants' lists. It may be a gamble to buy a very young wine, but your merchant will have gambled before you, and it may be the best way of making sure of it. It is a fair bet that in a good vintage most reputable vineyards will make good wine, and it will be cheaper when it is young.

BUYING Burgundy is a difficult business anyhow, and the situation is complicated owing to the multiplicity of growers, each making wine in his own way. This is true for German wines, too. There it is best to rely on growers or proprietors known for their reliability. The German state-owned properties are generally very well kept, while the domains of princes and counts are jostled by those owned by the convents and seminaries; the third estate is worthily represented by such names as J. J. Pruem on the Moselle and Buerklin-Wolf in the Palatinate. In Burgundy experience, discrimination and reliance on your wine merchants are the only safe guides, although there are celebrated names like Latour, Jadot, and Poirier, and the singly owned vineyards of various proprietors. Everyone has his own list of favorite Bordeaux châteaux. My own would include Ch. Léoville Barton, Ch. Palmer, and Ch. Cantemerle in the Médoc; Ch. La Mission Haut Brion and Ch. Pape Clement among red Graves; and a number of small but good properties in St. Emilion and Pomerol.

It is hard to forecast the future of a young red wine. I remember sampling the 1947 and 1948 Bordeaux when both were still in cask in Bordeaux. The '47's were soft, agreeable, and fruity; the '48's—admittedly a year younger—were green, unyielding, and astringent. But so far as the Médocs are concerned, the '48's have certainly turned out better than their more famous seniors. When buying young wines, you must rely on the wine merchants who have had to make their choice a good deal earlier; accumulated personal experience is also a guide.

WHAT then should one buy now? I am assuming here that till now you have done no systematic buying, the basis of all cellar-building. Bearing in mind all the general considerations already discussed, I would secure the future by buying wines for laying down: and first of all I would buy the 1959 vintage table wines. Although the over-publicizing of this vintage has caused a reaction, there is no doubt that it is the finest medium-priced vintage to be purchased easily in great variety.

Starting with Bordeaux, I would eliminate most of the St. Emilions and Pomerols, and certainly the over-priced leading wines, for they had not recovered from the 1956 frosts. The Médocs and the red Graves are worth concentrating on. For laying down it is worth, if possible, devoting a portion of the outlay to buying château-bottled Bordeaux and other wines bottled at source. This applies particularly to the greater growths; over the long haul the extra 25 cents to 50 cents is well worth while in finer aroma and depth of flavor. Many of the top wines, such as the Bordeaux premièrs crus, certain leading Burgundies, and most of the better German wines can only be bought as bottled by the proprietors. I should try at least to represent the first growths of Bordeaux, remembering that in the long run they may not all turn out to live up to their reputations.

Red Burgundies of 1959 are not considered quite so outstanding as the clarets, but they are fine enough all the same. Burgundy is difficult, to buy, for it varies so much and is, frankly, often blended with other wines. The best advice is not to buy by price alone. The cheapest is almost certainly the least good.

As to 1959 white wines, the only Bordeaux worth laying down are the fine Sauternes and Barsacs, preferably château-bottled. The white Burgundies of that year tend to suffer from lack of acidity and have become flabby or prematurely dark in color. But there were fine wines made, and they are certainly worth buying for drinking over the next few years. Much the same applies to the Moselles and Rhine wines: many lack acidity. The best of the Moselles include the "tributary" wines from the Saar and the Ruwer. Some wonderful Rheingau wines were made, and the Nahe had a better vintage than the Rheinhesse and the Palatinate.

These are all wines for the future: the cellar must supply present needs as well. Beaujolais, of course, is the answer for youngish reds. For Bordeaux drinkers, the 1953's are the wines to buy—the most agreeably forward and typical wines of the postwar period. Not for long will they be widely available on merchants' lists. Special attention should be given to the Pomerols and St. Emilions, as they were particularly good in 1953, and, owing to the frosts, they have not been equaled since. The 1953 Côte de Nuits Burgundies were better than the Côte de Beaunes and have better prospects of life: the 1952's are thought to be even better, firmer wines. In Bordeaux, this firmness has led to uncomfortably hard and fruit-lacking Médocs, but excellent Pomerols and St. Emilions, which are almost always fuller and richer.

Failing 1953's, the other vintage for drinking is 1955. But the best of these should be in accordance with the ten-year rule—laid down for another few years—and one need not be in a hurry to drink the Burgundies.

The next vintage plentifully shown on lists is 1957, which I personally find disagreeably hard for Bordeaux, but considerably better for Burgundies. The Bordeaux are definitely in the laying-down class for some years to come, and they are certainly worth gambling on to some extent. As uncertainty is one of the charms of wine-drinking, it would be worth investing in a selection of château-bottled 1957 Médocs; they are not too expensive. The really good white Burgundies of that year are still worth purchasing.

Both 1958 and 1960 Bordeaux are light, forward wines, very suitable for drinking while finer vintages are maturing in the cellar. Both are cheap, and some will make very attractive bottles. Burgundies may be ignored, but for Port drinkers 1960 is an essential link in the vintage chain. Those starting a cellar to include Port must certainly acquire the 1960's and also the slightly senior 1958's and 1955's. Although it is suggested that Ports, like other wines, are now made for earlier drinking, they still need at least fifteen years, and often longer, to reach maturity. To tide them over, Port drinkers should lay in sufficient quantities of the light vintage of 1950, backed by rather firmer 1948's and agreeably soft 1947's, found easily.

The vintage that at the moment presents the wine amateur with the biggest problem is 1961. In Burgundy, the quality is much like that of 1959, and no doubt the wines should be bought in reasonable quantity and at fairly reasonable prices. But in Bordeaux, exceptionally fine quality was matched by unusually low quantity. This vintage will begin to appear in 1964, and the price may horrify Bordeaux lovers. Many wine merchants have refused so far to buy this vintage, owing to the price. What the cellar owner must ask himself is whether he prefers to buy more wine of another vintage for the same outlay, and whether he can afford not to buy a vintage declared in Bordeaux to be the finest since 1945—some say since 1929.

How much will maintaining a cellar cost? Starting from scratch, an initial outlay of $600 in the first year would launch it very well. Thereafter, $300 a year would allow for growth as well as consumption: if prices do not rise rapidly, the outlay might fall to $250 or even $150, excluding spirits and fortified wines for current drinking. Although at first sight this may appear a heavy amount to spend yearly on wine, involving perhaps $3,600 on a ten-year-plan, it is in fact not much in comparison with common family expenditure on such things as cigarettes. Moreover, it is not expenditure for just one person: your family and your friends will probably drink more of the wine in your cellar than you will. Secondly, if you buy well and have to sell, you should not do so at a loss, particularly if you have a fair proportion of château- or source-bottled wines. You may lay down a cellar for future drinking but it could turn out to be a very good investment, too. ■

What NOT to eat abroad

How to avoid withdrawal pains at mealtime after your trip

By TONY SWAIN

• Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to young Peter Carr observed, "Traveling makes men wiser, but less happy. . . . They learn new habits which cannot be gratified when they return home . . . and are subject ever after to recollections mixed with regret."

Of course, as young men will, Peter undoubtedly ignored the sage words of his mentor. He must have sailed off to Europe, roistered around for a few months, and returned home to chew his jerky and sip his barley brew in disgust, dreaming of the pâté and wine which he knew were to be forever out of his reach.

People in this state of discontent waste so many hours indulging in food fantasies that they are, as Jefferson wrote Carr, "useless to themselves and their country." Therefore, with more and more Americans pouring into Europe every year, I feel it only my duty to alert those of you who have travel plans to the kinds of European food and drink most likely to create these frustrating cravings.

You may think that you are safe simply because you have no intention of hopping into Maxim's twice a day for a pop of champagne and crêpes Suzette. You plan to stick to plain, simple meals while you go about your business of absorbing culture. There's no danger in that, you think. You are wrong. Therein lies all the danger.

My first piece of advice is to begin your trip in England because, frankly, there is almost nothing there for which you can acquire a gastronomic addiction. The main thing to remember is to drink coffee in England. It's vile, but should you once get started on British tea—which even the most simpleminded counter girl working for the Lyon's chain can brew to perfection—you will rapidly come to require several bracing cups a day. You will never again be able to face that tasteless brown acid, which we produce in America by dunking little cellulose bags in boiling water.

The one food that the prudent American avoids in England is the ubiquitous and inexpensive dessert which the English call a "hot sweet." It is a fruit tart or pie, usually made of plump, sweet-and-sour gooseberries, with a hot, creamy custard poured over it. The British treat this dessert very casually, tossing it on the table as if it were quite as tasteless and soggy as the rest of their fare, but don't be fooled: it's habit-forming!

Across the channel in Ireland, the food is similar to that of England—except that it's good. You won't, however, find too much on an Irish menu that you can't readily get in America, except (in thunder!) the boiled potato—a humble tuber served up with a drenching of plain butter and a sprinkling of garden variety parsley. Who would think that it would be impossible for us to duplicate in the States this flavor or texture—firm, but not hard; soft, but never mealy? Perhaps it is produced by something special in the Irish soil or in the Irish farming methods, or perhaps the little people do a ritual dance around the bubbling pot, but there it is—the Irish boiled potato—sui generis.

Spain makes an ideal first stop on the continent, because if you're lucky, as I once was in Madrid, you may encounter a bit of rancid olive oil, which will put you out of danger of forming any food or drink attachments for several days. During this period you can creep into the gloomy interior of the Prado and sit for hours clutching your dolores-filled stomach and gazing at morose Goyas in perfect safety. If you have to cope with a healthy appetite, though, be sure you avoid sangría. This will take an iron will because in the hot summer months tinkling, frosted pitchers of it float by on every waiter's tray. It is a wine punch of the cheerful hue of raspberry Kool-ade and with spirals of orange and lemon peel bashed about in it with a wooden paddle. So irresistible is sangría as a fluid for washing down the crisp chunks of spit-roasted lamb and suckling pig at Casa Botin that, unless you have strong masochistic tendencies, the best idea is to stay away from that restaurant entirely.

When you think of eating in Holland, you probably imagine clean-cut products readily obtainable in the United States, such as Edam cheese and tiles of Dutch chocolate. Little do you realize that in this well-scrubbed country it is possible to get mixed up with some of the most exotic and highly seasoned dishes available anywhere in the world—those dishes that make up Indonesian rijsttafel (rice table).

In a place such as the Bali Restaurant in Amsterdam the rice table can have as many as thirty separate dishes. While all are delicious, you can eat rijsttafel with relative safety from obsession if you steer clear of one item—saté. This dish consists of pieces of roast meat, usually pork, skewered on sticks and covered with a sauce composed of coconut milk and ground peanuts, plus some unrecognizables. There's probably a psychological reason for the appeal of saté to Americans. Perhaps it recalls the carefree security of childhood peanut butter days. At any rate, if you once sample it, you will find yourself thinking about it a good bit more than you should.

In Germany your signing over into gustatorial bondage is most likely to take place in Munich between ten and eleven a.m., the customary hour for zweitfruchstuck—the Bavarian coffee break. The usual place for this fall from valor is one of the restaurants operating in conjunction with a major brewery—Löwenbräu, Pschorrbräu, Augustinerbräu, etc. You will come face to face with weisswurst, a steaming white, veal sausage flecked with parsley and dipped into a unique mustard (hot, yet sweet due to the addition of grated apple) and accompanied by just-baked, quoit-size pretzels, bought from a vendor who carries them about the room on a long stick. Naturally, the standard one-half liter of the management's product goes along for the ride. It is unwise to let yourself acquire the weisswurst habit because not only will you be unable to gratify it at home, but you won't even be able to gratify it in Munich after the Frauenkirche chimes the hour of eleven, which by strict tradition marks the end of weisswurst eating for the day.

You can recognize a person recently returned from Denmark by his habit of peeling the top piece of bread off his sandwich in a vain attempt to approximate smørrebrød. This pathetic sight should convince you to stay out of Oskar Davidsen's and the ABC cafeteria chain and to refrain from dropping any loose kroner into those after-hours smørrebrød vending machines sprinkled about Copenhagen. You must, however, also stay away from a few of the non-brod foods. One is buttermilk soup — cool, slightly sweet, with a rusket crumbled in it to keep the texture from being boring. One thing that may save you here is that to order it you must ask for kaernemaelksk-oldskaal. The other trap is rødgrød, a fruit dessert by gelatin out of pudding, blessed with the best traits of both parents and usually found in the company of fløde (cream). And one more precaution about Denmark: don't touch the butter, because once it is eaten, butter from home will taste like "the low-priced spread."

My final piece of advice is to omit France from your itinerary entirely. Shun any contact with it as you would shun "that first kiss which snaps on passion's manacles." If, however, you must eat there while passing through on your way to safer country, you should order the following dinner: one-half a grapefruit (not a melon glacé—half as large and twice as sweet as American cantaloupes); a steak (we do have better beef than the French, since they strike down most of their cattle in their succulent vealhood); a baked potato (not those crisp, little air-filled pillows called pommes soufflées); and a beer (not one of the delicious and inexpensive and seldom exported vins du pays). For dessert, demand ice cream. The waiter, of course, will try to bring you the cheese tray. If he absolutely insists that you try un petit peu, take care to choose no variety of chèvre. These are the cheeses which the French make from the milk of the "poor man's cow." They come in cylinders, squares, flat-topped pyramids, and shapes that look like a headache tablet for a horse. Inside their motley coverings these cheeses are the purest white, and the many varieties range in texture from soft creamy to hard crumbly with all bases covered in between. They are the most delectable cheeses known to man, and unless you have a close relative working for an airline on the run between Paris and your home town, you will never again see chèvre in its true state of youthful friskiness.

Then, as the finale to your dinner, you will no doubt be tempted with "un peu de fruit." Never, never let the waiter serve you fraises des bois, wild strawberries the size of the last joint of your little finger and twice as perfumed as anything Chanel ever bottled.

Well, there are your rules for avoiding entangling gastronomical alliances abroad. Heed them well, and you will never be forced to count yourself among those hapless travelers to Europe whom Jefferson described as being "torn from it as from the only good in this world, and returning to their home as to a place of exile and condemnation." ■

Who needs Jet Dry?

Everyone who owns a dishwasher and wants it to dry her dishes spot-free and shiny, needs JET DRY. If you have a recent model, deluxe dishwasher equipped with an automatic dispenser for JET DRY, be sure there is LIQUID JET DRY in the reservoir at all times. Otherwise water will not sheet off dishes instantly after the final rinse and unsightly water spots will form on your glasses and silverware.

If your dishwasher does not have an automatic dispenser for LIQUID JET DRY you can now get spot-free drying by placing a handy bar of SOLID JET DRY in your machine.

Many grocers, department stores and dishwasher dealers carry both liquid and solid JET DRY. If not available in your neighborhood write to: Economics Laboratory, Inc., Dept. 126, 250 Park Ave., New York, New York.

The practical virtues of the beach plum

This noteworthy native of the sandy shore has luscious fruit and beautiful flowers to contribute to your garden

By ELSIE SCULTHORP

• Have you ever tasted home-made beach plum jelly? Richly red, slightly tart, with an unusual flavor—a great and rare delicacy. There is in it the very essence of the ocean beach, the exhilarating tang of a fresh ocean breeze, the zestful tart-sweetness, and distinctive full flavor of all wild fruits.

Not only does the beach plum bush (Prunus maritimus) produce an annual crop of this flavorful fruit, it is also a shrub worthy of use as an ornamental in our gardens—and not only at the beach. Its attractive and profuse show of pure white flowers in May, its dense growth, bright green leaves, and its twiggy branches laden with colorful fruit make it one of our most attractive, colorful, and useful native plants.

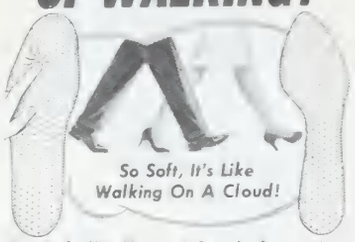
As an ornamental anywhere, but especially for sandy and windy seashore planting, the bush is invaluable. Drought, gales, and storms do not bother it, and it lives a long and healthy life.

The following quotation from the Bulletin of the Arnold Arboretum gives authoritative notice of its hardiness and adaptability.

"So white and so bold is its display of bloom that back in 1932 Edgar Anderson and Oliver Ames, of the Arnold Arboretum, were able to plot the wild distribution of the plant from the air.

"This purely decorative feature has not been overlooked by landscape planters, especially where fairly large groupings which call for little in the way of maintenance are being considered. Once established, even on poor soil, along roadsides or in informal, unpruned hedges or mass plantings elsewhere, the beach plum will pretty much take care of itself, and bloom well every year."

One of our most beautiful natives—the beach plum—grows wild along the Eastern coast from Maine to Virginia. It thrives in light, dry, sandy, infertile soil in which most plants would starve to death. It can be found all along the high beach and on the sand dunes, growing along with the bayberry, the sassafras, and the gnarled and weather-beaten old cedar trees—exposed to the fury of the gales and to the salt spray. It is very much a part of the beach scene, but it will also grow and produce fruit inland. It should flourish almost anywhere.



Here's some evidence of its adaptability to different environments. A friend who had always lived in a little New Jersey fishing village, and had always known the beach plum and its delicious jelly, moved to southern California. She missed the bush, so she ordered some plants from a nursery in the East. The bushes grew, flourished, and fruited in their new location in a hot, dry valley, far from the accustomed cool dampness of the oceanside.

Several eastern agricultural research and experimental organizations have attempted to improve the beach plum and have succeeded to some degree. Some of the cultivated varieties are called "Autumn," "Northneck," "Squibnocket," "Hancock," "Eastham," "Arrowhead," and "Snow." All are valuable for fruit, for ornamental purposes and, because of their strong network of roots, they are effective soil binders.

Although most of the mature beach plum bushes we see on the beach are from four to five feet high, the plant varies in size and habit of growth. Some bushes carry their branches low to the ground, and these low branches are frequently buried in the shifting sands of the dunes. These low-growing plants seem to fruit more regularly. This may be due to the reflected heat of the sand.

Other bushes are like trees in form and grow to twelve or more feet tall. The taller sorts develop a strong and picturesque branching system which, with the aid of judicious pruning, will make a handsome, sturdy and unusual small tree, long-lived, and tolerant of all kinds of abuse.

The hardy beach plum, often associated with seashores, is being discovered as a garden ornamental. A host of white flowers, bright leaves, colorful fruit make this maintenance-free shrub attractive anywhere. It normally blooms in May.

The shorter and stockier plants should also be pruned for better shape, better fruit, and greater ease in picking. Aside from pruning, for esthetic effect, you may also prune for the production of fruit. The bush forms its fruiting buds on the current season's growth, and the flowers and fruit follow the next year. It's best to prune in the fall after harvest. A pruned bush, too, is easier to pick.

The beach plum is a rugged plant, no matter in what shape it grows. It is rather rough in character, with uneven, dark greyish brown bark scattered over with tiny lighter grey markings. Short, stubby shoots grow at intervals from the stems, all over the bush. Picking the fruit is apt to be a scratchy business.

The plants are not particularly easy to transplant from the wild, as the bush has a substantial tap root which reaches far down into the ground. A few large, coarse lateral roots and a few fibrous feeders complete the root system. The plant is best moved when quite small, and preferably in the spring. When you set them out, leave plenty of room for them to spread. Some old bushes occupy a space ten feet square.

Because the beach plum is naturally a long-lived plant, it is best to buy plants on their own roots at the start. The Arnold Arboretum Bulletin suggests that instead of planting the new plants upright, as is customary with bushes, they be laid flat on their sides in a wide hole or a furrow about eight inches deep, covering only the roots, and leaving the rest of the plant exposed until the new growth starts along the length of the stems.

During the first growing season, the furrow is gradually filled in about the new shoots as they grow upwards, until the soil surface is level. By following this method, very few, if any, plants are lost in the transplanting, and newly set plants finish the first season of growth with up to as many as a dozen new shoots from below ground level, instead of the one or two stems on plants planted in the conventional manner.

This method of planting is not new. It was recommended for the setting of holly hedges centuries ago. It is particularly valuable when the bushes are being planted to bind the soil or when there is a large area to be covered.

The Bulletin has this interesting comment on the life span of the beach plum.

"Just what the life expectancy is is a matter for conjecture. Surely it is much greater than that of him who sets the plants or picks fruits from them. More than one seaside patriarch can point out wild plants from which he has been picking fruit for as long as he can remember. Such ancient specimens hold on to life, apparently because they are so deeply rooted that passing surface conditions, like drought, affect them almost not at all."

The show of bloom is an annual event, but pollination failure, pests, or other causes sometimes prevent the development of clean, ripe fruit on all plants every year.

The bush is attractive in leaf. The leaves vary from long and slender to nearly round. They have a sharp point and saw-toothed edge, bright green and smooth above, paler green beneath, where the greenish-white veins stand out clearly and have short, pale green stems.

In the blooming season, the clustered flowers cover the bush so that it is a snow-white mound and beautiful to see. The flowers stay on the branches a week or more.

The fruit, which on the south Jersey shore usually begins to ripen in late August and continues through September, varies in size from a half to three-quarters of an inch in diameter, and in color from an attractive deep blue to reddish to dark plum purple.

There's a small pit, like a cherry. The flesh of the beach plum is juicy, golden, and delicious, tart to sweet, with a distinctive flavor. Oldtimers say the jelly made from cultivated beach plums, although different and good, doesn't compare in flavor with the jelly made from the wild fruit.

The fruit is not generally eaten fresh, although it is sweet and good when ripe. It is used principally for making jelly. Preserves and plum butter can also be made but jelly is the usual product. It is rather like the Mirabelle conserve so popular in France.

The jelly is seldom found in shops, but home-made beach plum jelly is considered a delicacy.

In our family we have picked beach plums and made jelly since we were children. The plums are picked when not fully ripe, as there is more pectin in them then and the mixture will "jell" better.

The plums are washed and put in a big pot with the water that remains on them from the washing. More can be added if desired. The plums are brought to a boil and the juice strained through several thicknesses of cheesecloth. If more jelly is desired, the pulp remaining after this straining can again be boiled up with a little water and strained again and this juice added to the original straining. But we consider this a sacrilege and would not think of making such an adulterated version. We use one cupful of pure juice to one cupful of sugar and cook to a jelly test, pour into jelly glasses, and cover with paraffin.

It is delicious with either hot or cold roast lamb, most other meats, toast, English muffins, or whatever.

If you can't find them locally, here are a few sources for the plants: Kelsey Nursery Service, Highlands, N.J.; Bay State Nursery North Abington, Mass.; Weston Nurseries, Hopington, Mass.; Maloney Bros. Nursery Co., Dansville, N.Y.; The Linn Nurseries, Center Point, Iowa. ■

Where to shop for reproductions

Art lovers whose budgets restrict them to reproductions of the paintings they want may not realize that UNESCO publishes a valuable 500-page catalog of such reproductions. Here in one volume is a shopping guide to color reproductions of nearly 1,500 paintings. Galleries, museums, and collections in Rome, Paris, London, New York, Prague, and other art centers are represented in the book entitled Catalogue of Colour Reproductions of Paintings 1860 to 1963.

This book, printed in English, French, and Spanish covers the artists of the period alphabetically. It shows a small black-and-white picture of each reproduction available and contains the following information:

For the original painting: name of painter; places and dates of his birth and death; title of painting and its date (when known); medium; height and width (in both centimeters and inches); current location.

For the reproduction: process used in printing; size; UNESCO archives' number; printer (when provided by the publisher); publisher; and price stated in the currency of the country in which it is published.

The catalog makes shopping for reproductions easy, since publishers' addresses and ordering information is included. Also available is a similar catalog entitled Catalogue of Colour Reproductions of Paintings Prior to 1860. To order either catalog, send $6 to: UNESCO Publications Center, 317 East 34th Street, New York 16, New York.

Venting the Bathroom

Why it's necessary

How to do it

■ It is obvious that bathrooms need to be ventilated. Bathroom air should be kept clean and fresh. It is just as important to get rid of damp, moisture-laden air, which can cause so many cleaning problems and can ultimately damage wall coverings, paint surfaces, and even metal finishes in a bathroom.

The traditional dinky bathroom window is made small on purpose, to preserve privacy or to make the most of limited wall space. It is usually located in only one wall of the bathroom, precluding the chance for cross ventilation. Often, with the window wide open and the wind blowing against it, stale, moist bathroom air is trapped by outside atmospheric pressure and lingers inside for hours, or oozes into other rooms of the house.

But even with the advance in design today, architects and builders increasingly stress the necessity of including mechanical ventilation in all bathrooms to insure positive, controlled air changes at any time —with or without the natural aid of openable windows.

Mechanical ventilation is simply a motor-driven fan built into a bathroom wall or ceiling. It exhausts damp or stagnant bathroom atmosphere into the outside air and replaces it with new air drawn from a window or from the narrow clearance space under the door.

There are two types of bathroom fan: the propeller or impeller type (sometimes called "axial flow"), and the centrifugal blower (sometimes called "squirrel cage" fan).

The propeller fan has three or more blades set at an angle, or "pitched," like the propellers that drive an airplane or a boat. It works well if it does not have to overcome high air resistance, such as might be encountered in a constricted duct elbowing its way through a crowded attic to get to the roof. Operating against low air resistance, propellers do not use much power, and are the most economical fans to operate. They are especially suitable as wall fans that discharge directly to the outside air, or as ceiling fans discharging directly into an attic space.

Fans that exhaust into an attic are a great boon to bathroom remodelers because they eliminate costly, and sometimes impossible, ductwork and cutting of the roof. Most building codes permit attic discharge of bathroom fans if the attic itself is adequately ventilated by natural or mechanical means.

Centrifugal blowers are highly efficient and have great ability to push air through high-resistance ducts. They consist of a wide-rimmed wheel that sucks air in at the center and discharges it at right angles through slots, or vanes, in the rim as the wheel spins. Centrifugal fans require more motor power if they work against high resistance, making them more costly to operate.

Bathroom fans and blowers come in a variety of sizes and models. Some are combined with ceiling lights to make a dual-purpose unit. A few triple-use fixtures include an electric radiant heater with the fan-light unit. Some exhaust fans are equipped with self-closing louvers that work in conjunction with a spring-closing damper door. The damper opens and closes automatically to keep out dirt and cold air. Also available are manufactured skylight units that come equipped with integral fans.

Whichever type of unit is chosen, the fan mechanism should be sized and powered to ventilate the room in which it is located. An undersized fan is a useless investment.

The Home Ventilating Institute, 1108 Standard Building, Cleveland 13, Ohio, whose membership is comprised of ten leading fan manufacturers, conducts an unbiased testing program at Texas A & M University for the purpose of certifying its members' products. It has developed catalog ratings to indicate the true performance capacities of each fan. A tag attached to the fan grille shows the number of square feet a particular fan will ventilate. The consumer need only measure the area of his bathroom and select a fan of corresponding rated size to be assured of adequate ventilating capacity. A helpful free booklet, "What Homeowners Should Know About Removing Odors, Greasy Smoke, and Moisture from Their Homes," can be obtained by writing to the Institute.

Once the fan type and size have been selected, the location of the fan in the room must be carefully considered. Whenever possible, it should be placed opposite the source of fresh "make-up" air, whether it be the crack under the door or an openable window. This arrangement will set up a draw of clean air that sweeps the entire room as it moves toward the fan. If the room layout permits, it is generally desirable to place the fan directly over principle sources of air contamination, such as the bathtub or the toilet.

A properly sized bathroom fan should produce eight complete air changes per hour, or one change every 7½ minutes. Time switches are available that enable the fan to ventilate for a given period and then turn itself off automatically. ■

This Christmas, get her International Stainless for Mother's Day.

(and get her this $15 chest free)

If you're planning to give stainless for Mother's Day, Valentine's Day, her birthday or anniversary, don't wait. Get it now.

Because now International will give you a beautiful $15 chest free with your 50-piece set of International Stainless Steel. It's a special Christmas offer good until December 31, 1964.

Of course, she'll want to pick the pattern. (That's half the fun.) So plan to take her shopping with you. Allow lots of pattern-picking time. These classic beauties make it very hard for a woman to settle on just one.

Watch as she picks up a piece and enjoys its rich, weighty feeling. (That's half the pleasure of owning International Stainless.)

The prices are attractive, too. A 50-piece service for eight in Astra or Ashford is $79.95. Only $59.95 for the other patterns shown. And, right now, you'll get a beautiful wood chest to hold it all—absolutely free.

You may even decide to take advantage of this special Christmas offer to give her International Stainless for Christmas.

Oak Floors give you more warmth, more comfort

Oak Floors in your home won't make youngsters go to bed willingly, but this popular floor does add much to family warmth and comfort. The high natural insulating quality of wood shuts out cold and conserves heat (particularly important in homes built on concrete slab foundations). There's another kind of warmth to Oak Floors, too: the warm charm of wood grain and coloring that makes any room more pleasant. Add natural beauty, adaptable style, lifetime durability and low cost . . . and it's easy to see why Oak is the preferred floor for contemporary and traditional homes. Write for booklet with room photos in color and floor ideas.

And you thought ong wear was the only reason to buy nylon.

But then you discover carpet of plump Cumuloft® nylon. No ordinary nylon, and you'll be able to tell. The colors are richer. The texture is warmer. The touch is softer. Carpets of plump nylon meet mill and Chemstrand quality standards that start so high, a lot of ordinary nylon pile carpets will seem skinny and skimpy by comparison. Doubt it? Still think nylon is merely the hardest-wearing carpet you can buy? Run a hand over some carpeting with the big blue Cumuloft C. See what you think then. Wisely, you buy an Allen for its tone

(With it, you get Allen's superb tonal effects)

Let's be sure we understand the difference.

Sometimes people buy an organ for the extras that come with it. Zany stops, console gadgets, lights and buttons, glittering effects. Or even free organ lessons.

We believe this is wrong.

An organ should be bought for its most important feature—its tone.

Allen has put everything it has into creating Allen tone. Its time, its effort, its money, its research, its dedication.

That is why Allen has produced the finest organ tone among the electronics. Allen stakes its existence, and its future, on the quality of tone it produces.

What else could have won the admiration of world-famous concert organists, symphony orchestras and others having a stake in tone?

Certainly you can get sound effects in an Allen—more lifelike effects . . . Carillon, Xylophone, patented Chiff, Chinese Block, etc.

But you don't buy an Allen for these effects. They come with it.* You buy an Allen for its tone. A tone that makes every note, every melody, solo or ensemble effect more thrilling and real than any electronic organ you can name.

Allen tone pleases long after the novelty of owning an organ has worn off.

The proof is in the hearing. If you can't get to an Allen dealer, ask any church organist about the Allen's reputation for producing the finest tone, and send the coupon for interesting free literature.

Interchangeable grill and griddle are seated over an adjoining tubular heating element plugged into the recessed pan. The new Thermador drop-in unit installs in a 22" by 20" counter cutout, occupies only 2¾" depth; operates on a standard 110-volt electric circuit; comes with attached cable "tail" ready to wire into an outlet box. Surface panel (brushed stainless steel or Thermador porcelain colors) has built-in vari-speed heat control, 60-minute signal timer, cutting-board inset. About $129.50. First there was wool...then we could go out and brave the world.

Man against the desert,
the mountain, the sea. Would we have made it . . . without wool?
Forever, forever, forever wool has warmed the wind, cooled the sun, comforted the laborer, flattered the vain, been sturdy and steadfast to the poor . . . never once has wool failed us.
And now, as man asks for practicality, he discovers how easily wool becomes machine washable. Think. Beautiful fleecy wool. Safe flame resistant wool. Warm wonderful wool.
Washed by machine without a worry in the world.
Extraordinary!
But is it? Is this modern washability one bit more extraordinary than all the other things wool has done for man all these years. Is this not just one more step in a predestined journey.
In the year nothing when man appeared, the flock was waiting.

When Jens finished designing this candleholder we had to invent a whole new kind of candle.

Jens Quistgaard is not an easy man to reproduce. Commercially. So when he first brought us this little candleholder, we looked it over with a wary eye.

That hand-cast original of his had a curious grainy texture and an elusive color—neither exactly black, nor brown, nor gray—which gave the thing the look of some ancient ritual object. Reproducing that look, in quantity, would take some doing.

Then there were those little glass-smooth dots which turned up when we turned the thing over. An extra manufacturing step, but worth it. (We didn't want our holder scratching anyone's table.)

But these little difficulties could hardly be compared with the production problems Jens usually sets us. Quistgaard-wise, this thing still looked like a lead pipe cinch—until we tried to make candles to fit it.

They had to be very skinny. Otherwise Jens couldn't keep his holder small enough to fit any table—and still end up with twelve flaming candles. And twelve flaming candles, as Jens (and we) see it, are more practical than one, or two, or even eleven flaming candles. Because one, or two, or even eleven candle flames are less magical than twelve candle flames all glowing and flickering and dancing hypnotically together. And, in this electric-lit age, the only practical function of candles is magic.

But if our candles were very skinny, they'd have to be very long. Otherwise they wouldn't last through a leisurely dinner and a due period of candle gazing over coffee.

So we set a Danish candlemaker to dipping us some long, skinny candles.

And they bent. They bent even before we lighted them. They were just too long and skinny. Once lighted, they showed us another difficulty. Candles placed this close together melt each other. And drip. And burn too fast.

Those first candles were paraffin, the stuff of ordinary candles. Next we tried beeswax. And then tallow. And they bent. And melted each other. And dripped. And burned too fast.

Right about then, we began to feel at home again. In the past, Jens had set us to inventing new manufacturing methods. Now we had to invent a new kind of candle.

So we did. With the help of people who make waxes for molding and waxes for taking impressions and waxes for things we never even knew waxes were made for, we cooked up a new kind of wax. Out of it, we hand-dipped a new kind of candle.

These candles don't bend. They don't melt each other. They don't drip. (They're the skinniest dripless candles ever made.) And they burn for a full 2½ hours.

They also take color beautifully. Which is fortunate, because we set our minds on some pretty mysterious and magical colors. A strangely clear, frosty-windowpane white, a deep purple, a sea green, a stormy-sea blue, a pumpkin, a glowy deep pink, a true red, an ambery yellow.

They come 12 of one color to a box. They're 15" long. And, thanks to a little magic of our own, they're very practically priced. 5.95 for holder and candles together; 1.95 for candles.

If you've read this far, you must like practical things that do magical jobs. So perhaps you also like magical things that do practical jobs. There are 493 things of both sorts in the free catalogue of our "Top of the Table" collection. Write for it to: Dept. S, Dansk Designs, Great Neck, N.Y.

Floor: Montina Vinyl Corlon

The beauty of English meadows and gardens brings a room special charm. A floor that enhances this natural look is Montina Corlon, by Armstrong.

Montina is made of stone-like chips of vinyl set in a deep translucent vinyl base. Each chip is veined with rich, natural colors.

Montina Corlon has unusual texture. It looks pebbly, feels nubbly.

Because it comes in wide rolls, there's scarcely a seam—wall to wall.

It can be used anywhere in the home—even in most downstairs playrooms directly over the concrete.

To see Montina itself, send for a free sample at the address below.

Imperial Coffee Maid brews a cupful at a time, does it in 14 seconds. Hopper holds a pound, dispenses fresh coffee each time, regulates the quantity to match the strength-selector's setting: after each run, 4-second spin-washing cleans away used grounds. The all-automatic unit connects to a cold-water pipe, heats the water drawn in, constantly keeps a heated supply on tap. A "hot water" pushbutton gives direct dispensing for "instants." This counter model connects to a drain pipe; a second model flushes used coffee into an attached drawer base. $200. Available for built-in installation. By Imperial Coffee Maid, Skokie, Ill.

Latest Salton HoTray, the Swivel-Bin model, gives double-deck service. Detached bin can go into oven with frozen snacks, breads, pastries, etc.; then back to its warm-keeping niche with baked contents in tow. 17½" by 10½" or 21½" by 13" (heated area dimensions); $32.50, $39.50. Bin's walnut-finish front matches the wood handles and legs. The dome for uncovered food is an optional accessory. By Salton Inc., 419 E. 72nd St., N.Y., N.Y.

Decorator's Diary

One decorator's notes on new home-furnishing finds and ways to put them to work

"Tell me—what is your husband like?" I asked Frances Love, trying to recall where I had seen her face before. We were discussing the delicate subject of furnishing the bedroom so that Mr. Love's tastes would be given equal time.

"Well," said the young matron, pushing back a cascade of shoulder-length corn-color hair, "Fred's in Wall Street, but his hobbies are medieval history and painting. I call him a neo-Pre-Raphaelite."

"A neo what?" I asked, hardly believing my ears.

"Pre-Raphaelite," she enunciated. "Fred says they were the people who laid the groundwork for the modern movement back in the 1880's. They were arty and concerned with medieval design like the young man in "Patience" who walked down Piccadilly with a poppy or a lily in his medieval hand. It seems to run in Fred's family," she went on, "because his great-great-grandfather was one of the real ones—you know, Burne-Jones and William Morris and that lot."

"Oh," I replied, faintly.

"But don't imagine there's anything effete or willowy about Fred. He's just so knowledgeable about it all. He's collecting a library on art nouveau—that was the real point, at the turn of the century, when design began to look different, you know." She paused to reflect for a moment on the wisdom and sensitivity of her spouse. Then she added, informatively, if out of context, "His favorite color is green."

"All things being equal," I replied, "you couldn't be doing over that bedroom at a more auspicious time. Your husband is not the only one these days with a compulsive interest in art nouveau. Shop the fabric market and see its revival everywhere. It's typified in swirling patterns that remind you of Toulouse-Lautrec posters and in stylized, sharply outlined, regularly repeated flower arrangements that seem without perspective. But they're drawn with such a neat line that they satisfy the yen for orderliness that lurks in even the sloppiest of us."

"Flowers?" she said doubtfully. "This is a his-and-her bedroom."

"Actually," I said, rising to open the door of the sample cabinet, "I have already plucked for you a bouquet pattern which is no more sissy than a Tiffany-glass goblet. It comes from the new Garden Collection of Falstaff Fabrics, and I only regret I haven't a room in my own house to use it in!"

I flung the sample length over a chair back, admiring anew the engraved quality of its trimly designed, tight, multiflower bouquets and the way its pattern-spacing turns a floral into an almost nonrepresentational design. The sample chanced to be white linen, printed in grass green, although this screen-printed pattern can be ordered in a variety of colors and color combinations. (The varicolored pink, blue, yellow, mustard, and green on white version would be dreamy for a young girl's room.) It can also be printed on batiste for glass curtaining or dense cotton, all fabrics 48" wide.

The choice seemed so appropriate that as far as I was concerned the room was practically finished—at least in my mind, it was. I could see the printed linen as bed-spread, drapery, and window-seat material with batiste curtains, and I had mentally covered the walls with green burlap, as they did in 1900, and pushed the twin beds together with a common headboard of white-sprayed wicker, adding a wicker-based, glass-topped breakfast-for-two table, and a pair of red velvet chairs.

"Fred will adore it," said Mrs. Love, who had been quick to visualize the finished room, "and I especially appreciate those red velvet chairs. They sort of hint at regular deliveries of American Beauties. But most of all, Fred will take to the fabric because of its name. On the tag it's labeled 'Dante Rossetti'—and that's his favorite poet."

"I should have known," I said, for all of a sudden I knew where I'd seen Frances Love's face before. "If I am not mistaken, you are, minus stars in the hair and lilies in the arm, the closest copy of the Blessed Damozel your husband might have found in 20th-century America. And if I can unearth a suitable copy of Rosetti's own drawing of that lovely lady, it shall be his, framed and ready to hang within easy eyeshot of his wardrobe chest."

Alice in Wonderland, ready to color

"Help!" called Maria Strawbridge over the phone. "My child and your goddaughter has just notified me that her seventh birthday will be nothing short of Black Sunday if we don't come up with a certain Alice-in-Wonderland book she's been secretly coveting since the day she lost her first tooth. I'm afraid I'm supposed to know all about it, but don't. Is there a big book full of Alice drawings—Cheshire Cat, Mad Hatter, White Rabbit, Tweedledum, Tweedledee, and so on? She claims she can color the drawings herself and paste them on her bedroom walls like wallpaper. Find me a copy of whatever it is she wants, and I promise you I'll never again bully you into a bridge game with the Piersons or force you to play Scrabble!"

"A deal!" I responded happily. "And now that we've made it, I'm glad to tell you that my well-versed godchild knows what most sophisticates have known for two years—that there is a bound collection of 31 black and white prints of the original John Tenniel illustrations for Alice in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass. Each is on its own separate page, 14¼" by 19¾", suitable, as they say, for framing, but large enough to line up on a wall like wallpaper. If she insists, let my spiritual daughter color them in as she will, but I'd prefer these funny old charmers left in black and white. Book costs $3, published by Determined Productions, Inc., Box 672, San Mateo, California." ■ —M.G.

The walnut tops on our furniture aren't walnut tops.

We fooled furniture experts who saw them. We'll fool you. You'll fool your guests.

The walnut tops on our Reflection furniture aren't walnut tops. They aren't walnut veneer. No.

They're Impervia, a new discovery made by Formica® just for Lane. It looks so much like walnut it scares you, yet acts exactly like your kitchen counter. You can even clean it with soap and water or detergent.

If you buy even a single piece—like a cocktail table for $39.95*—and then tell people it isn't real walnut, we think you're crazy.

On this page are stackable, shiftable pieces, your answer to children's rooms and any room where you want wood but you don't want to nurse wood. You can have every piece in white, too, for girl-type rooms.

There's a Reflection bed for $39.95,* a side chair for $29.95,* and 57 other pieces for living, dining, and bedroom at good prices, too. And that's no lie.

If you buy a bargain carpet, you'd better take steps to protect it.

Maybe it looked great in the store.

The pile felt thick.

You got a packaged deal too. They threw in the padding and installation. Supposedly free.

When the carpet was down, you took good care of it. Used extra pieces.

But the carpet didn't hold up anyway.

It pulled, snagged, raveled, began to wear thin, faded, and even smelled bad after a while.

Don't laugh.

It happens all the time to otherwise level-headed Buying Guide-type people who for some reason can't seem to resist a "bargain" carpet.

The sad truth is, this kind of a carpet never pays.

That's why Lees doesn't make one.

We only put our name on first-quality carpet. Lees on the back of a carpet means something.

So if we cut corners, lowered our standards, used second-rate fibers, skimpy piles, just to give you a so-called good deal, how could we hold up our end of the bargain?

For a lot of good, down-to-earth reasons, "those heavenly carpets by Lees."

SPAIN. Accurate statistics are hard to come by, but Spain, almost certainly, has the largest extent of vineyards of any country in the world, over 3½ million acres in all. Due to the prevailingly arid climate, the average yield per acre is far lower than in France or Italy (let alone California), and the total production of Spanish wine is only about one-third that of France or one-half that of Italy—it amounts, nevertheless, to the very respectable figure of some 500 million gallons a year.

Only about two percent of this is Sherry, and Sherry, although easily the most famous, is no more the typical wine of Spain than Champagne is the typical wine of France. Most Spaniards have never tasted it, and over 90 percent of Spain's wine is common table wine, consumed currently and locally and never bottled. Travelers in Spain will find such wine available everywhere. It varies widely in quality but often is surprisingly good, and it is always inexpensive.

Supposedly of a higher class, yet almost invariably disappointing, are many elaborately labeled local wines which are not exported and not likely to be. Higher in alcohol and with more pronounced character than the others of their district, these rarely have the freshness and charm of French vins de pays.

On the other hand, the very best Spanish table wine, above all those of the Rioja and to a lesser degree those of Valdepeñas (plus rare exceptions from other provinces) can be quite extraordinary and remarkably good values, no less in the United States than in Spain.

Except in a few of the better-known districts, wine-making methods are archaic or even primitive in most of Spain, and it is a tribute to the producers' care and honesty and their respect for sound tradition that the wines turn out as well they do, for few can fairly be called bad. Many, if better vinified, would find a ready market abroad, such as the dry white wines of Rueda, in Old Castile, the the reds of Toro, not far from Salamanca, and the rosés of Yecla, in the uplands west of Alicante. Yet a great deal of heavy-bodied, deep-colored, blending wine is also produced, especially in Aragón and in the province of Valencia, and shipped in bulk to France and Switzerland to add some substance and higher alcohol to lighter and paler red wines.

The best table wines of Spain, especially the best reds, are by a wide margin those of the Rioja district, in the high valley of the Ebro, west of Logroño and not far from the French border. The finer of these are exceptionally good by any standards, and surprisingly close to the great Bordeaux in quality. In a distinctively lower category come the rather pale, somewhat common red wines of Valdepeñas, from south of Madrid, and in a still lower class the reds of Alicante, some reds and whites from round Barcelona (Panadés, Alella, Perelada, etc.), and the reds, whites, and rosés of the Miño Valley, along the Portuguese frontier.

A little Spanish sparkling wine is produced, the best of it quite passable but on the sweet side. It is often labeled "Xampán" (pronounced Champagne), and comes from the Panadés district, southwest of Barcelona.

It is above all in the somewhat special field of apéritif wines that Spain excels, and indeed she has hardly any rival since the gradual decline of Madeira (both in quality and in public favor) over the past century. Those who are familiar only with a few of the popular, standard brands of Sherry have no idea of the range and variety of wines that make up the Sherry family, and Manzanilla and Montilla are, in their limited categories, hardly less interesting.

The once famous Spanish dessert wines—Málaga, Tarragona, and the golden Malvasia of Sitges—have almost no commercial importance today, but they are still fine wines in their no-longer-fashionable class.

In a world of rising wine prices and improved technology, Spanish table wines should look forward to a bright future. Sherry, Manzanilla, and Montilla will continue to be appreciated and ever more widely known by wine lovers and true connoisseurs everywhere.

TASTING. Wine-tasting is both a very simple and an extremely complex art or science or skill. It may quite properly be described as any of these, or a combination of all three. There are two kinds of wine-tasting: one is intended to allow the consumer, whether a novice or a connoisseur, to taste a number of different wines and decide which he prefers and which he likes less well. His own palate is the final arbiter, and there is not, nor should there be, any appeal from his decision. A wine "is good if it tastes good."

The second sort of wine-tasting involves at least a certain amount of expert knowledge, and only those with wide experience and exceptional taste memory are capable of it. There exist quite definite standards as to what may be called quality and superiority in wine, and experts, tasting blind, will rarely vary in their ratings of any given wine, by more than four or five points out of 100. This is a far higher level of unanimity than music critics or art critics or literary critics ever achieve, yet taste and smell are, in general, the beggars among our five senses, for they have no accurate written language, no permanent record, no past.

Wine tasters, however, have their own professional jargon, or cant, and although the terms they use often appear bizarre or pretentious or even ridiculous to those unfamiliar with them, they are certainly more precise than the language of music critics (a "lyric" tone, a "warm" voice) or that of painting ("vibrant," "sincere," "well-organized"). Professional wine tasters do not drink the wines they taste: they examine them closely for color, against a white tablecloth, or a candle, or against the sky, tilting the glass in either case to see if there is a trace of telltale brown or gold around the edge of the wine. They shake the wine or spin it in the glass to bring out a maximum of bouquet, then sniff it carefully. They then sip it, wash it around in their mouths, and spit it out, breathing deeply, since the fact is that our nose, rather than our palate, is the best judge. And then, in their notebooks, they give a fairly detailed verdict.

TASTEVIN (Tat-van). Flat, shallow, silver wine taster's cup, widely used in Burgundy for sampling wines, especially young wines. It has given its name to the celebrated Burgundian confraternity of wine, the Confrerie du Tastevin, which has its headquarters in the old Château of the Clos de Vougeot, and branches and chapters in many countries, including the United States.

TAVEL (Tah-vel). The most famous rosé wine of France and probably one of the oldest, since it was said to have been a favorite of Francois I and was praised by the poet Ronsard. It is made, principally from the Grenache grape, plus a limited but important admixture of Cinsault and some Clairette, Bourboulenc, Carignan, etc., round the village of this name, west and across the Rhone from Avignon. The soil in the limited production zone (recently and quite properly enlarged) is, on the whole, rocky, shallow, and arid. The yield per acre is small, and the wine has, as a result, more flavor and bouquet and usually more alcohol (12½-14 percent) than other rosés of the Rhone Valley. Its one close rival is Lirac from a directly adjoining commune. The annual output is now not far from 200,000 gallons, well more than half from the large, modern, cooperative cellar. There are a good many smaller producers as well, and many of them estate-bottle.

Many writers on wine, most of them British, have contended that Tavel is a unique exception among rosés and improves with age. This is anything but the opinion of the vignerons who themselves produce Tavel, who much prefer their wine when under two years old, and regard a five-year-old bottle as simply a curiosity. Vintage years on Tavel shipped to the United States should generally be distrusted; the youngest is probably the best.

TEMPERATURE. Wines, especially fine wines, are strikingly affected by the temperature at which they are served. A white wine too warm seems lifeless, flat and dull; a red wine too cold seems numbed, astringent, almost entirely lacking in bouquet. This is not a matter of etiquette but of fact, and anyone who cares to experiment can find it out for himself. Much of what has been written on the subject, particularly by Englishmen and Frenchmen, is entirely irrelevant to wine service in the far different climate of the United States. "Room temperature" in an English country house or a French château is not the room temperature of a New York apartment, or a New Orleans restaurant in summer. A wine that is best served "cool" in Europe may require considerable chilling to render it fresh and agreeable during July and August in America. Here are a few rules:

1. No wine should ever be served at over 70 degrees, no matter what the temperature of the dining room.

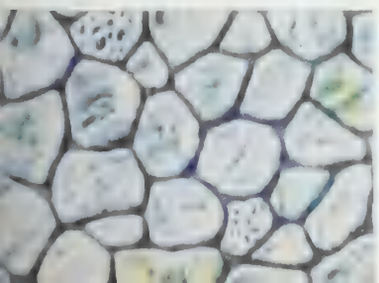
2. Great red wines, particularly old ones, are at their best at 65 degrees to 68 degrees; if they warm up slightly while they are being served and drunk, this will help them rather than injure them.

3. Lesser red wines, the younger ones especially, should be served somewhat cooler, or even slightly chilled in warm weather. Sixty degrees is perhaps ideal—roughly the temperature of a good cellar.

4. Dry white wines and vins rosés should be well chilled, the finer ones and those low in alcohol (as Moselles) to about 55 degrees; the others to 50 degrees.

5. Sparkling wines and most sweet table wines (as Sauternes) should be iced. The great sweet German wines (Beerenauslesen, etc.), however, should not be brought to below 55 degrees.

Needless to say, wines can be chilled just as well in an electric refrigerator as in an ice-bucket; the ice-bucket does have the important advantage of keeping the wine cool while it is being served. Its principal disadvantage is that the wine in the neck of the bottle often is not chilled at all, and it is perfectly proper, although a little unorthodox, to put a bottle of white wine neck down in the ice-bucket for a few minutes before it is served.



THIN. Applies to a wine deficient in alcohol and body; watery, poor.

TOKAY. One of the most famous and, at its best, one of the finest white wines of the world. The best has never been cheap or easy to find, and this has been more than ever the case since World War II, now that the former royal, princely, and even papal reserves are presumably consumed by deserving Commissars.

All true Tokay comes from a small district in the Carpathian Mountains of north-eastern Hungary called the Tokaj-Hegyalja, and the wine's name is spelled Tokaj in Hungarian. The principal grape variety is the Furmint, which has never been grown commercially elsewhere, and the total production of all grades amounts to about 2½ million gallons a year. What is exported is shipped in stubby, long-necked bottles of about 17 oz. (50 centiliter) capacity and the only exporter is the Hungarian Government.

The rarest and finest Tokay, which is truly more of an essence (Eszencia) or low-alcohol cordial than a wine, is comparable to a German Trockenbeerenauslese. The least expensive and commonest Tokay is a grade called Szamorodni, which can be anywhere from quite dry to fairly sweet, depending on the vintage, but is always rather high in alcohol, rarely under 13 percent.

Considerably better, more expensive and sweeter is what is called Aszu, the Hungarian equivalent of a German Auslese, which contains a certain fixed proportion of overripe grapes, shrunken by the pourriture noble, or Edelfäule. The quantity of such grapes used per cask in the making of the wine is usually stated on the label in terms of puttonyos, and the more puttonyos, the finer, sweeter, and more expensive the Aszu.

All the true Tokays have a wholly distinctive bouquet and flavor. Even the lesser ones are often interesting and good value; the best (rarely found) are very great wines indeed.

Tokay is also the name often given in Alsace to the Pinot Gris or Ruländer grape and to wines made from it, although this grape is certainly not of Hungarian origin, is unrelated to the Furmint, and yields an entirely different wine. It is also the name given to a California table grape, pink, thick-skinned, fleshy, which has no imaginable connection with the Fermint or with true Tokay wine. Wine made from this grape, never good, is legally entitled to the name "California Tokay."

TRAMINER (Tram-me-ner) (Tram-me-nair). One of the better known white wine grapes of Alsace, the Rhine Valley, the Italian Tyrol, and even California. Its name is believed to come from the village of Termino in the Tyrol. Grayish-pink in color when ripe, it has, both as a grape and as a wine, a rather special pronounced aroma all its own. Traminer wines are generally soft, rather low in acid, often with a trace of sweetness; the best of these are usually labeled Gewürztraminer.

TRIER (Tree-er). Principal city of Germany's Moselle Valley, not far from the border of Luxembourg. It was already an important town in Roman days, known as Augusta Travirorum (whence Treves, as it is still called in French) and its Roman monuments and ruins are still impressive. Many of the leading Moselle wine producers have their cellars in Trier: the Bischofliches Priesterseminar, Bischofliches Konvikt, the Vereinigte Hospitien, the Friedrich Wilhelm Gymnasium, Von Kesselstatt, the Staatsweingut, etc., and the great semiannual auctions at which most fine Moselles are sold take place there. The city itself has a few vineyards, though none of much consequence.

TROCKEN (Trawk-ken). Literally means dry in German, but as a wine tasters' term it is distinctly less favorable than its English or its French equivalent, sec. Except with regard to sparkling wine, it can also mean "withered" or seche, lacking in freshness and fruit.

TROCKENBEERENAUSLESE (Trauk-ken-beer-en-aus-lay-zuh). The highest, sweetest, and most expensive of the numerous categories into which fine German wines are divided. Literally the word means a wine made from a selection (Auslese) of individually picked grapes (Beeren), which have been left on the vine until so ripe as to be practically dry (trocken) or raisined. Such grapes are harvested only in great years, and they yield an infinitesimal amount of very sweet, wholly remarkable, and fabulously expensive wine.

TROTTEVIEILLE, Chateau (Trawt-vee-A). First Growth of St. Emilion. Wines remarkable for their finesse and breed.

VALAIS (Val-lay). Swiss canton producing the best red wines of Switzerland and some of the more interesting and better whites. There are nearly 9,000 acres of vineyard strung along the rocky, enormously impressive, upper valley of the Rhone, here only some twenty airline miles from the Italian border but separated from Italy by the highest peaks of the Alps. The vines extend from near Martigny, at the foot of Mont Blanc, past Sion, Sierre and Visp, almost to Brig, at the northern end of the Simplon tunnel. Among the finer Valais wines are Dole, Ermitage, Johannisberg, and numerous whites called Fendant after the grape variety out of which they are made.

VALPOLICELLA (Vahl-po-lee-chel-la). Admirable red wine, velvety, fragrant, fruity, rather light in alcohol and body but remarkable for its subtlety and breed, produced northwest of Verona, in northern Italy. There are five comuni, or townships, in the strictly delimited zone: Negrar, Fumane, Marano, San Pietro Incariano, and Sant' Ambrogio. Four grape varieties are grown: the Corvina, Molinara, Negrara, and Rondinella. The lighter and lesser grades of Valpolicella are usually consumed as carafe wines (and there are no better such wines in the world) when about a year old. Those of superior class (Valpolicella Superiore) are bottled after some eighteen months in wood and improve in bottle, but should generally be drunk before they are five years old.

VALTELLINA (Vahl-tell-leen-na). Vineyard district in northern Italy, near the Swiss border; its red wines, which are among Italy's best. The producing grape, known here as the Chiavennasca, is in reality none other than the famous Nebbiolo of Piedmont, and here again it gives wines of remarkable firmness, body, and class. The best of them come from five little hillside areas just east of the town of Sondrio, called, from west to east, Sassella, Grumello, Inferno, Grigioni, and Fracia, the three first being generally considered the finest. In many instances their wines are sold simply under these vineyard names, with no mention of Valtellina at all. They are interesting and unusual wines, their deep crimson color tinged, one would almost say, with black; sturdy, well knit, almost unattractively firm when young, they develop slowly and well in the bottle, and are long-lived. The vineyards are no less extraordinary, for they are terraced along the lower slopes of a great, 12,000-foot mountain wall (the Swiss-Italian border) and face, across the narrow, slot-like valley of the Adda, mountains almost equally high, the Alpi Orobie of northern Lombardy.

subtle distinctions, but the effect, not so noticeable in a single flower, counts enormously en masse, and groups of white flowers are delightful with well-chosen combinations of other colors.

White flowers are the perfect thing to use with flowers of cerise, magenta, orange, red-orange or brilliant blue. These strong colors fight like Kilkenny cats, if placed near each other in the garden. Drifts of white flowers are needed to separate them and tone them down. Of course, there's always green to dilute the strong effect of these exciting and violent colors, but white has the extraordinary quality of harmonizing discordant colors.

border, but plant them in masses. So used, their purity and cool beauty will lend an air of serenity to the garden and accentuate the color of nearby flowers. Some white flowers, not of great beauty in themselves, such as sweet alyssum and feverfew, are quite beautiful in groups and valuable for massing and contrast.

Many white flowers bloom beautifully in shady places. Their shining color carries well at a distance, and at twilight, gleaming in the dusk, the effect is especially lovely.

Gardens can be enjoyed at night as well as in the daytime. If the flowers are of the sort that release their fragrance in the evening—nicotiana is one of these—your evening stroll through the garden will be all the more pleasurable.

What could be more beautiful than the charming spires of a group of white foxgloves along a woodsy path, or the ethereal grace of a luminous group of white columbine, or fragrant white hesperis. This is, as Shakespeare said, "such stuff as dreams are made on." And, too, there's the beauty of one of our most extraordinary flowers—the treasured Christmas rose, which blossoms even in the snow.

The fresh, elegant, and tranquil effect of white flowers against a background of green has encouraged the making of all-white gardens. A garden of such restricted coloring is, however, difficult to compose. Its limitations are apt to become tiresome, if on constant view. It is usually better to simply set off a small planting of choice white flowers against a background of broad-leafed or coniferous evergreens.

No matter how much you admire white flowers, it will take an iron will to exclude from the garden all the other lovely floral colors. Besides, the white needs other colors to bring out its refreshing, cool quality.

The list that follows places each flower in its usual month, but it is a rather arbitrary arrangement, as the time of blooming will vary with the location, the weather, and other factors. Many plants have a long blooming season and may be enjoyed for several months.

The problem of choosing white flowers is not so much a matter of finding them as in deciding among the many choices.

The list therefore, is not meant to be complete. It is limited to those that perform well and are readily available and relatively easy to grow.

By JOHN ELLESTAD

If you're searching for ways to add more storage space to your home, these tall chests may be the answer. Narrow enough to stand against the smallest tick of a wall space, not deep enough to be in the way of passing traffic, they nevertheless manage to hold a multitude of things. The many shallow drawers almost force you to be neat by making you organize your things into separate—and smaller—categories.

WINDOW SHOPPING

WS.

Dear Suspicious:

This is a Christmas letter to all of you who have been flipping through House Beautiful's Window Shopping pages for years, marking items that intrigue you but never quite taking the step from wishful thinking to decisive action by ordering those items through the mail.

As a woman who likes to shop--likes to feel, examine, and compare merchandise--I can understand your hesitation about ordering something sight unseen from a company you have perhaps never heard of. But as your Window Shopping Editor, I know, too, the lovely advantages that come to the one who sits by her own fireside and in a single comfortable evening completes a sizable chunk of her Christmas shopping.

Naturally, most of you will not do all your buying in this manner. But it's amazing how many names all of us have on our Christmas lists that can be crossed off just by curling up with this big November issue.

For example: there are your children's teachers, your cleaning woman, your hairdresser, the girls you play bridge with, the secretaries in your husband's office, those nieces and nephews that seem to multiply like wire coat hangers.

Stores are marvelous during the holiday season. The Christmas decorations, the mad excitement of everyone shopping for someone she loves, even the aching feet and the arms loaded with packages are all part of the fun.

Unfortunately, though, along with the fun often go the aimless wanderings, the looking and not finding, and finally the buying just for the sake of solving one more gift problem. It is to eliminate this kind of needless frustration that we ask this year that you take your courage as well as your pen in hand and give Mail Order a try. Remember that anything you buy through House Beautiful's Window Shopping pages carries a "satisfaction or money-back" guarantee.

So how about it? Light the fire. Pour yourself another cup of coffee. Get out your Christmas list, pen, paper, and checkbook, and discover the fun of shopping by mail through Window Shopping.

Merry Christmas!

Peggy Ryan

Elegance in Living

True elegance in living is the happy possession of those who design their homes to fit their needs precisely . . . and at the same time create a setting so beautiful that daily activities are a constant source of enjoyment. We are proud of the many reports we have received through the years that Scheirich Kitchens provide the ultimate in enduring excellence and beauty — whether the kitchen be tiny, with just a few cabinets, or an elaborate installation incorporating every luxury the modern homemaker ever dreamed of. If you are planning on building or remodeling we urge that you look into the possibility of installing a Scheirich Kitchen. Consult your builder or kitchen dealer — and in the meantime send coupon for literature.

THE WORK OF TWO HANDS

Seventy five to a hundred years ago a Vermont craftsman built this sap bucket to hang on his sugar maple. This year the same bucket was painted by the famous Tom Fitz-Simons of Manchester, Vermont. Like all hand made things no two are exactly alike but they run about 9½" tall by 11½" across the top. Use them for waste baskets, for magazines, planters, knitting or to add a touch of distinction beside the fireplace. A unique Christmas present. Comes in bright red with gold eagle and traditional red, white and blue streamer. Also black or white background with fruit—red apple, golden pear, tawny apricots and purple grapes all with green leaves and vines. Contrasting lining.

THIS IS THE STORY OF THE 36 LOST MASTERPIECES!

Imagine, if you can, finding several thousand sets of reproductions of the world's greatest paintings that were lost for more than 25 years! It actually happened...and this is the true story of the discovery of that lost treasure: Back in 1937, immediately following the depression years, a voluntary national committee for art appreciation was formed to create an art program that would give the public a well-needed morale lift. It was the committee's decision to reproduce, as perfectly as humanly possible, a collection of the world's greatest art masterpieces and make them available to the public at a price within the reach of nearly everyone. A select group of a dozen nationally prominent people selected what—in their opinion—were the best paintings of Matisse, of Van Gogh, Renoir, etc. Over $1,000,000 was spent on this art project and 3,000,000 prints were made.

For some unknown reason, after a quantity of beautiful reproductions were made the entire project was abandoned and this collection of reproductions was stored in a Brooklyn warehouse, where they remained, undisturbed for over 25 years.

Even with a brief inspection, we realize that we have found an outstanding value.

Making full color photographs of the original paintings was the least difficult part of the job. The masterpieces had to be reproduced through the most modern techniques of the day. Original glass plates were produced, and it was found that at least 6 different colors for each painting would have to be provided and, in most cases, it was necessary to print with 8, 9, and even 10 different colors in order to bring out the full realistic true fidelity of each masterpiece.

When these prints were recently "rediscovered," leading lithographers and art critics unanimously agreed that they had never seen such true fidelity in color printing. They were most impressed by the fact that these lovely masterpieces still held their marvelous original colors even after those many years. The prints in this folder are from the original collection!

What makes these reproductions so unique is the fact that they are literally collectors items, for when they are gone it will be impossible to reproduce prints of comparable quality. Although the glass plates still exist, the conclusion and judgment of lithographers is that it would not be economically feasible to use those plates to print additional reproductions.

Now—sleep under a blanket of warm air. . .

Warms with air instead of weight

THE BEDTIME LUXURY of warmth without weight can be yours to enjoy this winter . . . yours to give to favored names on your gift list. Thanks to British ingenuity with textiles, Shillcraft Thermal Blankets provide as much warmth as ordinary blankets, with less than half the weight. And, because of their lightness, they're remarkably comfortable on your feet and chest.

USE IT YEAR-ROUND. Unlike other blankets, Shillcraft Thermals can be used in all seasons. Forget your storage problems. For here is the first successful use in blankets of "thermal insulation." Thousands of tiny air cells are woven into Shillcraft Thermal Blankets. In winter, a light cover on top turns each cell into a pocket of still air. Cold stays out. In summer, use the blanket without a cover. Body heat passes off. You sleep comfortably cool, yet covered.

SO BEAUTIFUL it has the look of a fine bedspread. And durable too. That's why you find Shillcraft Thermal Blankets in the first-class cabins of great transatlantic liners . . . in the luxury suites of leading hotels.

NEW DELUXE QUALITY. For those who want the ultimate in sleeping luxury and comfort, Shillcraft proudly announces a new and exclusive addition to its line of imported British Thermal Blankets . . . the 100% Wool Deluxe. Sumptuous to see, luxurious to the touch, exquisitely crafted by master British weavers . . . available in this country ONLY through Shillcraft, the pioneers of Thermal Blankets in the United States.

REGULAR LUXURY WOOLS. Shillcraft's ever-popular line. Downy, 100% wool, imported Thermals—favorite gift for shower, wedding, baby or business remembrances. Nylon-bound.

100% COTTON TOO. Imported, machine-washable, ideal for allergy sufferers. Self-hemmed edge.

CHOICE OF 7 DECORATOR COLORS: Rose pink, powder blue, mint green, lemon yellow, lilac, beige, white. (Note: Lilac not available in Deluxe line.)

SHILLCRAFT ORIGINAL THERMAL BLANKETS are never sold in stores. They're imported only by Shillcraft and sold only direct to you. That's why they can be offered at remarkable money-saving prices. No. 27—LARGE REINDEER SET: OUR ARTISTS' "MASTERPIECE" AND OUR LARGEST AND FINEST DISPLAY

For several years, we planned on creating a reindeer display that would be as near authentic as possible to the reindeer and sled used by the top-ranker, who rule in the land of the "Northern Lights." First, the Nordic Sled, sailing like the wild geese, then the reindeer with flowing white mane, large ears and clumsy feet with an over all coat for reindeer, and all, that would blend into a colorful and realistic display. Reindeer are 17½ size, 5 feet 3" long, and the display took the best to up about 40" in height. Weatherproof wood, hand-painted reindeer, individual motorized Santa. Complete price includes 4 bright lighting units, shoes harness, etc. Shipped Railway Express, Shipping Charges collect. Weight 244 lbs. Complete with 8 deer—$369.00. Leg motorized on lead deer—$26.00 extra.

Each fine stone begins as a pebble upon the white sand shoreline of New Jersey, where they are gathered before being inspected for size, shape, color potential, and overall adaptability. Each is ground for over 400 hours so that the extremely delicate colors will be developed to full gem-like lustre. Finally, the polished stones are graded and matched by expert craftsmen before being mounted in attractive settings. No two stones are alike in color, size or shape! Never before have stones such as these been employed in the art of fine jewelry making, and your Beach Pebble Jewelry will be a handsome addition to your fashion accessories!

Give your man real coffee . . . the most delicious he's ever tasted in only half a minute with this amazing coffee pot! All it takes is your favorite regular coffee, boiling water . . . and a flick of the exclusive Pressure Plunger. Water is pressed instantly and all at one time through the coffee grounds (the pressure extracts the flavor), then brewing stops . . . before flavor and aroma escape, before bitterness seeps in! Get any strength you want from mild to extra-strong from the same pot. Make regular or Expresso . . . exactly the amount you want—brews one cup as full-bodied and perfect as six cups. Instructions included. Insta-Brewer saves on coffee, too, because you use only the coffee you need—no extra measure "for the pot." Corning heat-proof glass, stainless steel filter and working parts, guaranteed 5 years. Who wouldn't love to have an Insta-Brewer! Remember your favorite coffee-drinkers when you order your own! $9.95 ppd

VIRGINIA HAM AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE

Christmas Tradition for 300 Years!

Smoked for weeks over hand tended fires, kept going day and night, while juices drip and pungent hickory smoke permeates and flavors the meat. Aged a year, then baked with wine and sugar. Arrives ready to serve (doesn't even need heating), for Christmas feast, buffet, cocktails, sandwiches, etc. Traditionally sliced paper thin and served cold; goes a long way; easy to keep; a delight to any homemaker during busy holidays.

300 years ago Virginia planters traded their hams to English sailing masters. Soon the old world's epicures were agog over this new flavor! Virginia Ham became famous around the world. It still is. Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms has been slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, and aged the way the colonists did it 300 years ago. For there is no short cut to such flavor. Just before shipment each ham is soaked, simmered, skinned, the fat trimmed, then sauced with wine and sugar, and baked to a sweet and savory feast of flavor unlike any other!

Nested in burgundy tissue in sturdy Old Virginia Smokehouse box, with carving, keeping, serving suggestions enclosed, here is a grand treat for your family and guests—and a magnificent gift! Our hams are prepared to please discerning people. We guarantee complete satisfaction, or money refunded. $1.98 per lb., net cooked weight, postpaid in U. S. Sizes: 9 to 15 lbs. Please specify if wanted now, for Christmas, or other date.

Here's the most amazing Carving Knife ever designed for the pleasures of eating! Ordinary knives tear thru meat and squeeze the juicy goodness out—but not this revolutionary patented invention! The All-Purpose Gourmet's Carver is made with a remarkable 8-inch blade actually containing 176 cutting edges. This amazing edge has razor-sharp blades alternating with chisel-action ridges, with grooves to prevent clogging. It's unbelievable how Gourmet's Carver glides thru ham, beef, fowl, game—never disturbing the juices within. Gourmet's Carver never needs sharpening! Continuous use forms a constantly new razor-sharp cutting edge. This is the remarkable "corruserrated" edge that actually flows through tough leather. You can slice WAFER THIN meat, vegetables, tomatoes, onions, etc.—make your dinner table a joy to look at!

Carver is made in England of finest SHEFFIELD STAINLESS STEEL with PERMANENT MIRROR FINISH. Beautifully white and balanced handle for sure grip and perfect slicing. IN A GREAT TRADITION— THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS CABERNET SAUVIGNON.

This is Brother Timothy, the Brother Cellarmaster. He is drawing off a sample of the Cabernet Sauvignon, a choice red wine named for the rare variety of grape from which it is made.

Brother Timothy is justly proud of this superlative red wine, and of its companion, the Sauvignon Blanc, a remarkable white. Both are "limited edition" wines.

For nearly a century now, The Christian Brothers of California have made superb wines like these in support of their teaching missions on the West Coast.

Brother Timothy suggests that you try these wines. Then you will know why it is that there are twenty-two great American wines. They are made by The Christian Brothers.

FOR FREE WINE SELECTOR, a guide that tells you how to choose and enjoy wines, write to: The Christian Brothers, Department W.J. 2030 Union Street, San Francisco 23, California.

SPONSOR A KOREAN ORPHAN IN THANKSGIVING FOR YOUR BLESSINGS

PENNIES A DAY DOES IT!

Act NOW Before Korea's Winter Starts

Bring Christian loving care to a boy or girl of your choice in our Orphanages. Only $10 a month—just 30 pennies a day—provides every necessity including shelter, food, clothing, medical and school supplies. Interest a co-sponsor, $5 each, or your Sunday school or other group.

You will get Orphanage picture and history, also life story, picture and address of the orphan you select. You can write or send parcels as you wish. Replies are prompt, in English. Sponsors are THRILLED with this personal contact. Many new sponsors are desperately needed to take in desolate children wandering the streets.

Victims of Tragedy and Grief

Kong Ie (E-1). Both his parents died in a suicide pact the day after Christmas in 1960. He was only 6. Many desperate Korean parents thus seek to "solve" their plight and leave orphaned children. Brought by city to us.

Yung Soon (E-2). Her father, a laborer, died of disease in 1960. Whereabouts of mother unknown since she remarried in 1963. Brought to a Compassion Home by an uncle.

Ho Bong (E-3). Both parents have been confined at Boo-pyung Hospital with leprosy since he was 6. He was brought to our New Brightness Home to prevent contraction of the disease when his family could not care for him.

Each day our children are taught the Bible, sing Christian songs and earnestly pray. They attend church and Sunday school and are led to receive Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. Grasp this great opportunity to help train a child for Christian leadership in Korea. Choose a child NOW!

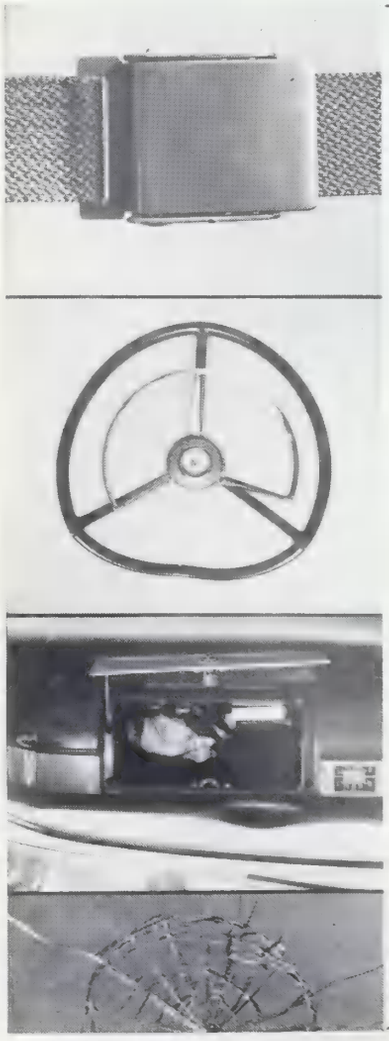
Beautiful and safe—that's what every fireplace should be. When you are burning seasoned hardwood, and it's quietly being consumed, you can safely part the curtains. But when a fire crackles, or when you leave it untended, safety demands a screen.

Every fireplace needs a screen

by DAVID X. MANNERS

▪ A fire burning on the hearth appeals to our deepest instincts. Through the years it has meant security and warmth. It shows us an endlessly varying play of light and shadow. But it is also a hazard. Sparks shoot out from it and can do serious damage, especially when no one is around to snuff them out. A firescreen thus is a necessity.



Screens are a modern invention. Before the advent of central heating, they were seldom used. One hundred years ago, the only place you would find one was in the nursery, latched to the mantel on either side to keep children out of the fire. Where a fireplace was depended on for heat and in constant use all day long, a screen would have been looked upon as a heat-robber and a perpetual nuisance. Anyway, what was the real need for it? In those days the fuel was almost certain to be long-burning, well-seasoned hardwood, with sparks at a minimum.

What they did use was a fender —a low, curving metal strip in front of the fire. Often there was no front hearth, and such protection was essential to keep a sudden down-draft from blowing glowing embers out on the wood floor. Today, fenders are almost purely decorative.

Although there are a few antique Victorian fan screens still around, the English traditionally burned coal in their fireplaces and so seldom had need for a screen. Coal cracks as it burns, and tiny pieces shoot out, but these bits aren't glowing. When coal glows, it fuses, and no longer spits. The French burned faggots and did use screens. You can buy antique French standing screens of ornate design for $275 up. But they were designed for tiny fireplaces, and are of little practical value today.

For today's fireplace many types of screens are offered. In buying, obviously the first thing to consider is safety. If a screen isn't insurance, what good is it? The only problem is just how much of a compromise to make between safety on the one hand and convenience and esthetics

We made this sterling silver porringer circa 1774.

(It's not for sale.)

El Grandee, 4-piece place setting, $39.25

This sterling silver buffet fork was made at Towle yesterday.

(No extra charge for the 190 years of craftsmanship.)

THE TOWLE SILVERSMITHS are still in almost the exact spot in Newburyport, Massachusetts, where the man who made the porringer above worked. His name was Joseph Moulton III, and his sons carried on the great tradition of unhurried craftsmanship and unsurpassed quality that actually began in 1690.

Today, you can see the results of that great tradition in every piece of Towle silver. You can feel it. You can sense it. Today's Towle sterling is beautiful—and made to be used. For occasions or every day. (You can even put it in the dishwasher; it's solid silver.)

Take a good look before you buy it. Study its elegance. Pick up a piece. Balance it. Examine its perfect design, its grace, its grandeur that comes only from the oldest silver-making tradition in America—it dates from 1690.

But hurry. You've already missed 274 years of great silver.

Thermopane® INSULATING GLASS

MADE IN U.S.A. LOF GLASS

Toledo, Ohio 43624

Thermopane consists of two panes of glass with d hydrated air hermetically sealed between them. The are two types of Thermopane: (1) With Bondermet Seal® (metal bonded to glass) for windows of all size and (2) GlasSeal® (glass-to-glass seal) for wood metal sash of more conventional sizes.

on the other. Ideally, a screen should combine all three.

For complete safety, a fire screen must completely shield the entire fireplace opening. If the screen is open at top, bottom, or is not tightly shut at the center or sides, a spark or glowing bit may get through. Even the small openings left in some screens to permit andirons to project through can be an escape point. Most curtain, fender, and door-style screens offer complete shielding, but their screen mesh must be fine enough to stop all sparks. Some low-priced screens may not be adequate in this respect. If you have a rug that runs right up to the hearth line, you may wish to get extra-fine mesh, rather than the mesh that is standard on most screens. It's not simple to switch wall-to-wall carpeting around to hide burned holes.

Curtain screens get their name because they hang like a curtain in front of the fire. Their screening is made of closely woven spiral wire. They hang from a track and are adaptable to fireplaces that open on more than one side, and even circular designs. Usually they bunch to either side of a fireplace opening, reducing the width of the opening; but in designing a new fireplace, you can provide pockets on each side for curtains to recess into, or space for them to hang beyond the opening, leaving the opening completely clear. They can be installed with "pressure bars" or clamps so no drilling into fireplace masonry or steel is involved.

Curtain screens may be recessed in the opening. The top bar supporting the curtain is then flush with the face of the fireplace, the curtain about an inch back. This is attractive, but there is some risk that the curtains may be damaged by fire. People who have had this experience often switch to screens that hang outside or ones that are portable.

Portable curtain screens are similar to the attached variety in appearance, but when you have a fire going you can pull them away from the opening a bit. This frees convected heat to escape from top and sides. No matter what you may hear, anything you put in front of a fire, including screens, impairs the heat flow. If a portable screen overlaps a minimum of 2″ on all sides of the opening, you still have complete protection when it is pulled back 2″ from the opening.

A curtain screen, whether attached or portable, may be a manually operated type (you grasp a tab or holder on the screen itself to open it), or it may be a traverse type and operate by pulling chains that hang to one side. The traverse-type is a convenience, and the pulls aren't as likely to get hot to the touch, but it is considerably more expensive than the manual type. If your budget is tight, it may not be worth the difference.

Curtain screens are usually passably attractive on fireplaces of contemporary design, but you may find they detract from the appearance of antique and traditional fireplaces, especially those with elaborately carved openings or ornate mantles. You can get curtain screens that will match any shape opening, however.

One variety of curtain screen works up and down, like a window-shade, instead of across. Its screen of fine bronze wire disappears into a roller housing, placed across the top of the fireplace opening or concealed behind its lintel. It is raised and lowered by pulling on a continuous chain, which is something of a nuisance. But it is self-storing and out of sight when you don't want anything between you and the fire. They're expensive (36″ wide, about $110).

A French-door screen offers a maxium of security. It closes tight against sparks. It is strong enough to stop anyone who might fall or be pushed against it. It can prevent the breakthrough of a log that might roll off the fire. When there is no fire, it can effectively keep all pets out.

In addition to satin or matte black, screen frames come in more than a dozen different finishes and metals, including brass, copper, steel, and bronze. Avoid bright-finish framing unless you want to call attention to it. As for the screening itself, the most popular choice is matte black. It lets you see the fire better and is less obtrusive. If you rarely use your fireplace and prefer to hide the litter that has a way of collecting there, you may want a brass or other bright-finish screening. You'll see the screen instead of what's behind it. Hanging a brass screen from the mantle is a way of concealing an unattractive fireplace front.

Fire will eventually blacken a brass screen (unevenly, too), but you can now get "brass" in a spray can and refinish it yourself. If you are at the shore and corrosion is a problem, you should have brass rather than steel mesh. You can get brass with a black finish.

Some fire screens have a pair of doors, meeting at the center and equipped with a latch. These rate high on safety, but if you keep the doors closed, the metal framing centered before the fire is distracting. One type of door screen is made of tough, heat-resistant glass. If viewing a fire through glass is unappealing to you, you can open the doors wide. (Some have a mesh attachment for spark protection.) When the glass doors are closed, they shut off far more heat than a mesh screen does.

Glass screens have special advantages. In some areas of the country nighttime temperatures may fall far below zero. Unless you throw water on your fire, you can't close the damper when you go to bed. The result is that the flue sucks heat out of your house all night long. With a glass-door screen, you can prevent that loss. Further, by closing the damper at the bottom of the screen, you can make the fire die down, saving your fuel.

If you have a fireplace of the circulating-heat type, glass doors can increase its efficiency. A glass firescreen may be useful, too, in correcting faults in fireplace design and in controlling draft. If your fireplace won't draw or smokes because the flue isn't in proper proportion to the opening, the glass fire screen can provide the answer. Glass doors can be used to stop troublesome cross-drafts through a fireplace that has openings at both front and back.

Fender screens are one-piece, freestanding types that bow outward in front of the fireplace opening to accommodate andirons. If the fender screen (sometimes called a Boston or "bird-cage" screen) is closed at the top, it offers complete protection. Some fender screens are open at the top. They do let more heat out into the room, and, being less obtrusive, they'll probably also strike you as better-looking, but they aren't 100-percent protection. Leaving your vacation cottage to return to the city, you might have cause for concern, as you would

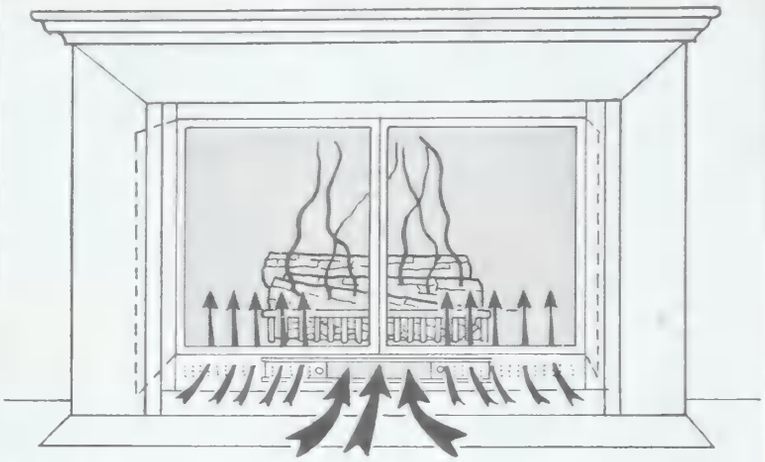
It's a "red letter day" when you treat your home to

ROXBURY CARPETS



Back in 1859, when we began to make carpets on some of the very first power looms in America, it was tapestry designs the women wanted. These high quality carpets were regarded as the finest in the field. And that's the same kind of quality you can still count on today. The styles have changed, of course, and now Roxbury offers the beauty of many types . . . woven, knit and tufted. The choice of fibers has widened to include the long wearing, resilient, and easy to keep clean Acrilan acrylic fiber. The range of textures is almost endless. The color spectrum has increased. But . . . whatever the color you choose for your own home . . . it's actually always a "red letter" event when it's by Roxbury.

Look for Roxbury carpets at fine stores everywhere.

A glass enclosure offers adjustable draft control for better regulation of the fire. When the fireplace is not in use, it keeps heat or air conditioning from escaping up the flue. Its doors open wide for fire tending. There are models available with French door and for corner fireplaces.

with any screen that doesn't completely screen.

Other freestanding screens include flat single-panel "spark arrestors" and folding types with three or more panels. The flat type, if it fits plunk against the opening, is completely safe. The folding types will let out more heat and are easier to store.

Essentially, storage is the special merit of any freestanding screen. You can put it out of sight or to one side when you want absolutely nothing between you and the fire, use it only to safeguard the fire when you retire for the night or leave the house. In summer, you may wish to fill the fireplace with potted plants or put a small pool with aquatics there. You can then have growing green things instead of a big black hole, and there is no screen to interfere.

Questions to consider in regard to a portable or a freestanding screen are how light is it and how easily handled? Is it stable enough so that it is not easily upset? How completely does it guard the fire?

In considering fire screens, you also must take andirons into account. Some andirons may interfere with screens. Curtains and screens are available with slots to let the andiron shanks through, but they are not quite as safe, for sparks can also get through the same openings.

Andirons with long shanks can be used as log rests and so may perform a useful function. But if you have separate log rests, which is the recommended practice, you don't need andirons unless you want them purely as ornament. In that case, the kind to have are ones with very short shanks so that a space is left between the andirons and the log rests for the curtain or screen.

Every fireplace needs a screen. If you are building, design with the screen in mind. Such small details as making the screen valance the same width as bookshelves, and aligning them with these or with other important architectural features, are the kind of thoughtful care that will make your screen fit naturally into its role. Match its color to the color of its surroundings. If you are buying for an existing fireplace, careful shopping can accomplish much the same end.

You can buy fire screens at stores listed in the yellow pages under "Fireplace Equipment." Many department stores have fireplace shops. Those Unexpected Pleasures

Unplanned delights that have entered the lives of other travelers can add enjoyment to yours, if you're heading in the same direction

By MARION GOLCH

▪ When friends return from a journey and report that everything went as planned, we are secretly delighted that we hadn't gone with them. The trips we remember with fondest nostalgia are those that went off the beam once in a while, turned a corner that let us discover something unadvertised, and, like a little turbulence during a smooth plane flight, punctuated the voyage with unprompted liveliness.

It's really true that no matter how masterfully you've plotted your itinerary or how religiously you've done your required reading, what you don't expect still plays a major part in travel enjoyment. This being the case, some invaluable clues for the rest of us can come from other travelers who have been pleasantly confronted by the unexpected.

Are you one who believes that all "chain" hotels are alike, suspecting a monotonous sameness no matter what part of the world they serve? Then listen to these excerpts from a letter from Hawaii by one of our most design-conscious and hard-to-please friends:

Nassau's markets aren't super. Simply colourful.

Shopping among the markets that line Nassau's waterfront gives you a change instead of stamps.

Here Bahamas workboats—one of the world's last great sailing fleets—unload the seafoods, tropical fruits and spices of the outer islands. Personalities reign supreme at the market; the seagoing merchants are as colourful as the bill of fare.

Their easygoing humour is the Bahamas' main produce. It flourishes in a climate that is perpetually June, and is thus best sampled when the mainland winter is at its unfunniest.

Furnishing a home

— a story without an ending

■ Furnishing a home is a continuing and developing process. It has a beginning, yes, but it rarely has an ending. Additions and subtractions are made as your needs change. Substitutions are made as your taste matures.

For most of us, there has never been, and never will be, a time when we will completely furnish—with one big purchase—a house or an apartment. Even the first home, after marriage, is a combination of new pieces, heirlooms, and hand-me-downs.

Furniture manufacturers now recognize this process for what it is. Fewer and fewer companies are making "matching suites" that look well only with each other and must be bought as an ensemble. More and more "collections" are made up of several designs that not only look well with each other but also live happily with furnishings of other periods.

In the 24-page report that follows, you'll see furnishings of many kinds, individual pieces and groups, all selected to fit into this continuing process—which may even now be taking place in your home.

One way this furniture reflects a mature modernity is that it doesn't deny the past. Many pieces like this commode can fill the current desire for an odd or special space-filler which might be antique.

The match-mate look is absent from this group: rather it is coordinated in its materials and design. Dining tables also come in low versions for games. Chests combine with grilled decks to form bookcases. Upholstered pieces. N. C. Schoonbeck Co.

A new definition of "modern" furniture

Study this furniture if you want to know what "modern" really means. It is so in the spirit of its own time in looks and function, it will fit almost everywhere

■ "Modern" long ago ceased to mean free-form shapes, chrome tubing, and hard-glazed flat surfaces. Such things were born of the twenties, and "modern" means belonging to now, attuned to the tenor and tastes of life in the sixties.

As truly representative of the present, we nominate this four-page sampling of the Custom Folio Three collection by Henredon Furniture Industries, Inc. These carved, substantial pieces in pecan, hickory, and chestnut are clearly in the same design character as such currently favored architectural features as pecky cypress walls, slate floors, tile, brick, and glazed gables. Yet they'd be as compatible in a brownstone townhouse or a provincial country house, for their informality has a certain sophistication which keeps them from being rustic or overly casual. (Please turn the page)

With present-day meals likely to be anywhere in the house, a mobile server fills a modern need, moving on concealed casters. Flip-down leaves extend width from 36 to 72 inches, disclosing a stain-resistant "Glenstone" surface. The same pattern panels the chest on our cover.

The scaling of this furniture takes into consideration the modern need to put all space to useful purpose. This cabinet with the cross-hatched double doors suggests itself as a storage piece on a stairway landing or the upper area of a split-level. It is a mere 37 inches in width.

Robust mitered panels and beveled ornamental motifs are reminders of the 17th-century Jacobean the early settlers carried to this country, but the design has been absorbed rather than copied. Here it gives depth and interest-provoking dimension to surfaces and shapes which are as direct and functional as present-day living demands. This textured look-at-it-again quality tends to conceal wear marks, and so this furniture meets the modern insistence on practical upkeep. The dark "Burnished Umber" finish is slightly distressed: the green painted finish is antiqued. Both camouflage the ravages of use. The slatelike topping on several tables and chests is a hard-wearing composition called "Glenstone."

Carved fascias of chests, many of which can be stacked or grouped (see page 250) can provide a look of architectural detail in places where it does not exist. A variety of sizes takes into account the sort of space moderns must deal with in everything from split-level houses to one-room apartments. An obvious reflection of modern life is the vast choice of storage pieces for the accumulations of a prosperous era.

In company with wrought iron and tile, this modern furniture may look like Spanish design. Yet you see certain 18th-century English overtones in the tambour book table, and even the lines of Biedermeier in the chairs. The buffet is topped in "Glen-tone."

Quality woodwork and fine fit of the separate units give these stackables the character of built-in cabinetwork. The case and table tops are mar-resistant plastic with the look of wood. Three of these rooms are on display at Bloomingdale's, N.Y.C., through December. Also available at fine stores in other cities.

Improvements on the classic concept of furniture that stacks

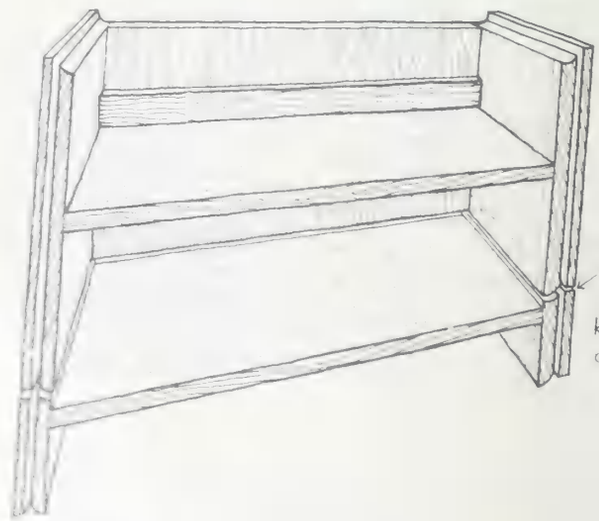
The easy way to get the look of built-ins is with ready-made stacking units. Now pieces shown here and on following pages are improved in alignment, stability, and usefulness

• Modular stacking units have the stable, orderly appearance of built-ins until they are jarred out of alignment. It then becomes all too apparent that they are separate pieces and not a unified whole.

The problem of alignment is subtly solved in the walnut furniture shown on these pages from Founders Furniture, Inc. Designer Dave Parmelee shaped the meeting edges of the pieces so that they interlock to keep the stack aligned. The ridges are a decoration aspect, and only close inspection reveals their function.

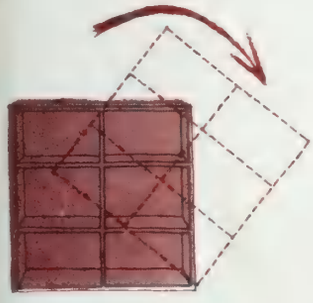
The first modular stacking furniture in this country was the Globe-Wernicke bookcase. It was designed before the turn of the century and had outside brackets at the ends to keep the units in place. The modular furniture of today is more refined and has scope and flexibility undreamed of when the idea was first conceived. (Please turn the page)

A choice of wood plus four handsome lacquer colors is available for back panels of open deck units and on drawers and wood door fronts. Cane front doors are also available. All finishes other than wood must be custom-ordered. Sympathetically correlated chairs and tables permit a well-integrated room.

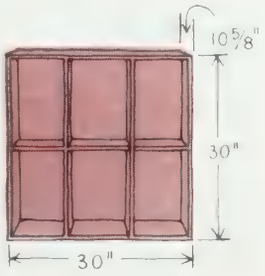


Double bedroom is furnished with stacking pieces, twin desks, double bunks, low table, and seat-chest, all made by Founders Furniture Inc. Top surfaces are tough plastic that avoids the shiny look. Drawer pulls of solid walnut are subtly decorative, but do not call undue attention to themselves. Drawer units above work well under windows (see the examples on page 250).

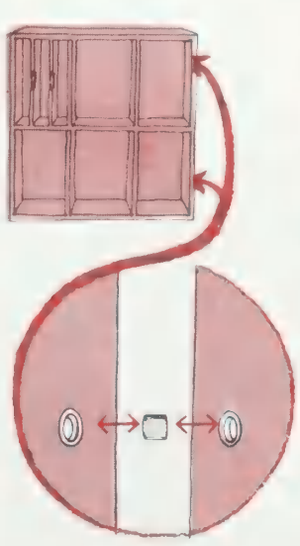
IMPROVEMENTS ON FURNITURE THAT STACKS
continued

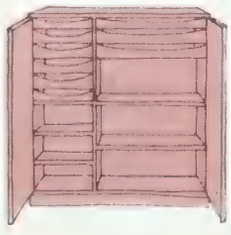


In addition to cabinets, chests, cases, and hutches that stack, there are tables, chairs, sofas, desks, and mirrors designed in the same module, finish, and style.

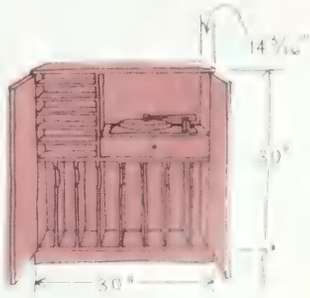


Stacking units are, of course, ideal for renters, who will take their "portable architecture" with them when they move. But installations for home owners also make good sense, for it is sometimes impossible to find carpenters and painters who can attain comparably fine finished results with built-ins. And with the ready-made units, you can see the finished product. You know exactly how it will look before you buy.





Double units above have the interlocking meeting edges align and stabilize the cases when they are stacked on the bases. Top cases may also be stacked on each other without the use of bases.



On this page you see another interlocking system. Upper cases, in the photograph above, can be used in two ways. By rotating them a quarter-turn, as shown in the drawing, you can have two tall shelves or three shorter ones. Sections can be compartmented and are available with glass doors. The units are kept in alignment by inserting short dowels into two small brass sockets set into the sides of one case, then fitting the matching sockets in the adjoining case over the protruding dowels. The base cabinets have wood doors and are slightly deeper than the open cases—exact dimensions are indicated on drawings. Shown here are "standard" models, but other combinations of shelves, trays, drawers, and such for both upper and lower cases can be had on special order. The right combination of pieces from Kroehler's "Fancy Free" collection will go almost anywhere. Here in a corner of a library, a left-arm chaise is used with a 40" seating unit, and a right-arm chaise makes a cozy, compatible arrangement for the bookish. The total composition becomes a room within a room.

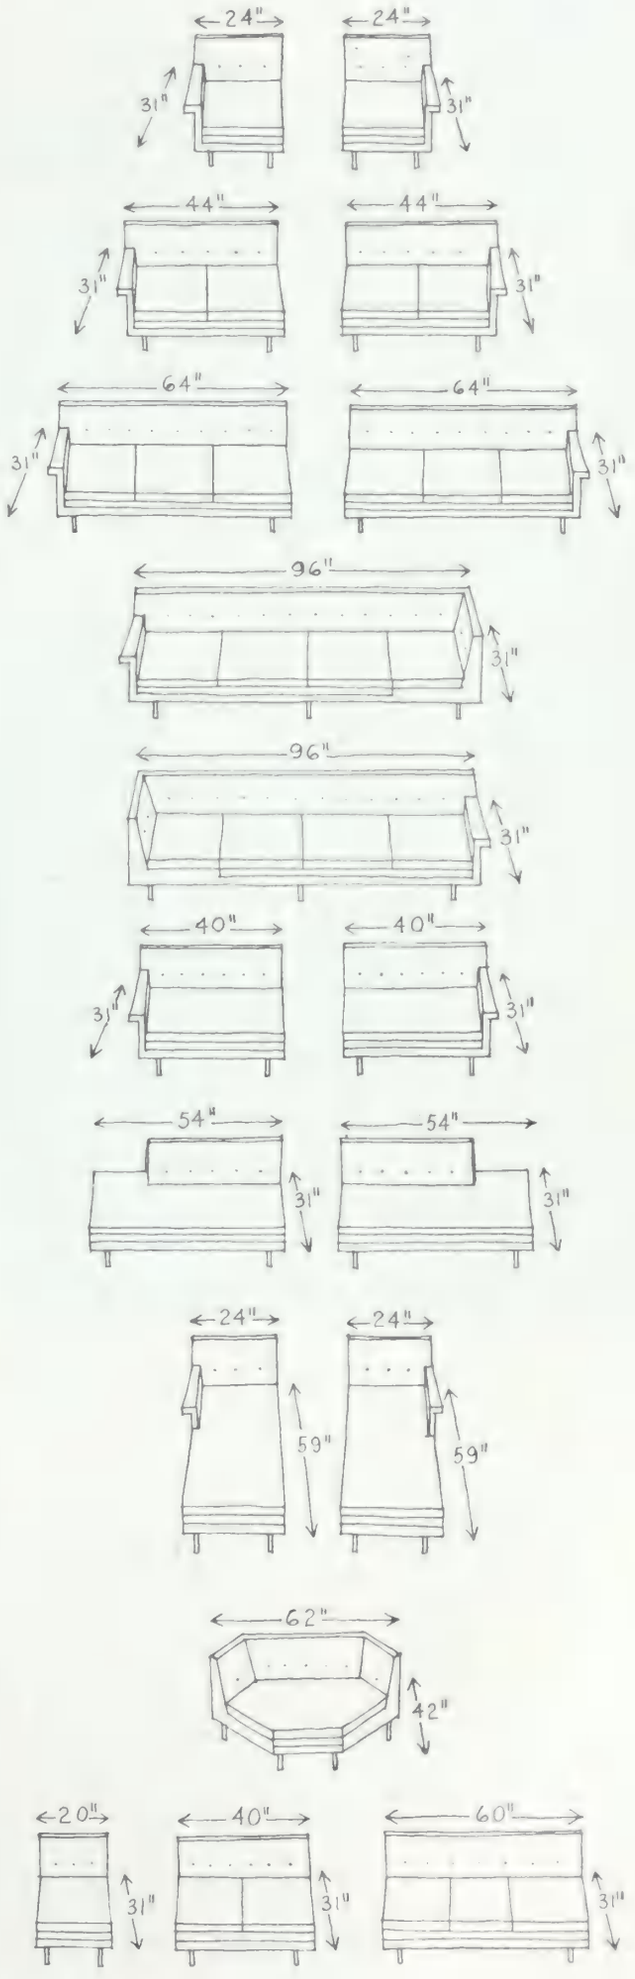
New ways to arrange seating



Picture the typical living room—the sofa is bracketed by end tables and flanked by occasional chairs. The whole group sits menacing a coffee table at the center. Here are two new ways to break that cliché

When there are many pieces to choose from, you can solve almost any problem. In the drawing at right we show all sizes of all the sectional pieces. Top photograph shows two long chaises with two chairs in an inviting fireside arrangement. For a long wall, above, chaises are combined with 60″ seating unit.

The sectionals in Kroehler's "Fancy Free" group

■ Even a good formula loses its magic when it's done to death by repetition. It simply gets more and more monotonous. The seating arrangements in the living room have been frozen into what is now a prevalent and boring cliché. The only alternatives have been made possible by the "sectionals," families of upholstered pieces that gang together horizontally and even turn corners. But even sectionals (in the medium-priced, widely distributed lines) did not have enough pieces to permit many solutions.

On these two pages is a new family of seating pieces, most of them sectional units. Their (Please turn the page)

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY [illegible]

The permutations and combinations possible with Kristian Vedel's designs for the Selig Company are almost endless. They are used above, and on the next page rearranged, in front of a fireplace, but they will go practically anywhere in the house.

NEW WAYS TO ARRANGE SEATING

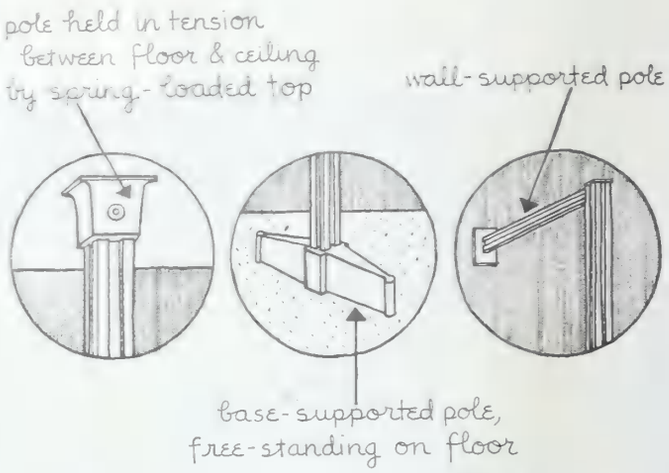
sizes and shapes permit solving almost any kind of problem. The possibilities of different combinations are almost endless. They can be grouped in straight runs, U shapes, L shapes, or in three sides of a square. Especially useful are the left- and right-arm chaises, which let you close in the ends of a group, making it cozier. They will fit against walls or stand free in front of a fireplace or in corners. For sheer versatility they are unmatched.

In three photographs on these two pages you see another kind of solution, from Selig, designed by Kristian Vedel. This system has single chairs, ottomans, and tables, all made to hang together in innumerable ways.

High-back and low-back chairs go well with each other or with companion pieces. Furniture is available in Brazilian rosewood. Down-filled cushions are covered in black oxhide. Ottoman can also be used as stool, as above. Glass table top is removable.

In the photograph below, a pair of glass-top tables separates chairs. Accessories can be placed on top of or under the glass. It can be removed completely for tray effect. Oxhide arms and backs are also removable. Nylon webbing supports the cushions.

A two-way sofa is a good way to create two separate groupings in the same room



• Buying a whole new group of furniture is not the only way to effect major changes in furniture placement. One piece—if it's the right piece—can transform almost any seating situation. The selection above appears to be a sofa when you first see it. Its base, cushion, arms look like a sofa. But a second glance suggests a chair with an ottoman, or a love seat, or perhaps a luxurious chaise. It can be all of these things, which makes it an excellent device for altering seating arrangements. Dunbar, the manufacturer, calls it Tete-a-Tete. It is shown in only one of many possible settings. For this living room it is placed perpendicular to one of the walls. It separates this space without setting up a barrier to either area. Two tables, one with lamp, serve opposite ends, opposite sides. This delicately scaled unit is 80¾″ long, 27½″ deep, 27½″ high. The loose arm pillows are down-filled. Seat cushion is made of foam rubber.

The built-in look with take-apart convenience

Rooms with glass walls are no problem when you use a pole system, like this one by Founders. Units of rosewood, cane, and glass have finished backs, so are handsome from either side. The scale and openness of assembly make it look as if it belongs against window. Light and view are not blocked, and there is ample clearance for curtains to pass.

Now you can have the advantages of built-ins without driving a nail, plus the good looks and craftsmanship of the finest furniture

• Pole systems offer an answer to one of the most difficult of decorating problems: What can you do with space that ordinary furniture can't fill?

Many modern apartments have partition walls that defy solution. What can you do, for example, with a thirty-foot wall? To give it character and interest, as well as unity, what you really need is an architectural built-in. But if you are a renter, that's impractical. Even if you were allowed to install it, you couldn't take it with you.

In these days, we need furniture with flexibility to satisfy changing, often fleeting, demands. Many of us need furniture we can move from room to room, house to house, apartment to apartment. On pages 234-237 we showed how stacking furniture can fill such needs. Pole systems, too, have this mobility, this adaptability to changing patterns of living. You can add to them, rearrange them, take them apart.

Pole systems are the first kind of ready-made furniture in which you share in the design. From a variety of drawer, cabinet, and special-purpose units, you select whichever ones you need to fill your use. (Please turn the page)

Pole systems go beyond furniture in their intensive utilization of space. Limiting the number of open shelves in this living-room grouping, right, and putting most stored items behind doors prevents busy, cluttered look. It also gives assembly the solidity and character of architecture. Founders Furniture, Inc.

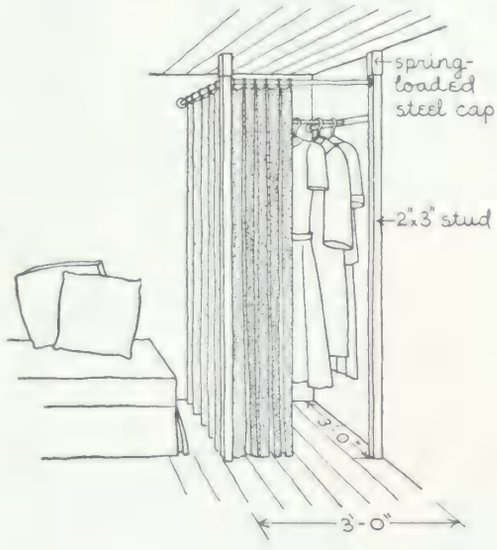
Customizing touches can give a pole system special design flavor and make it look more than ever like a real built-in. Drawing at left shows components in Omni system, supported by vinyl-footed poles. Photograph above shows same arrangement after the poles have been enclosed by walnut panels and trim.

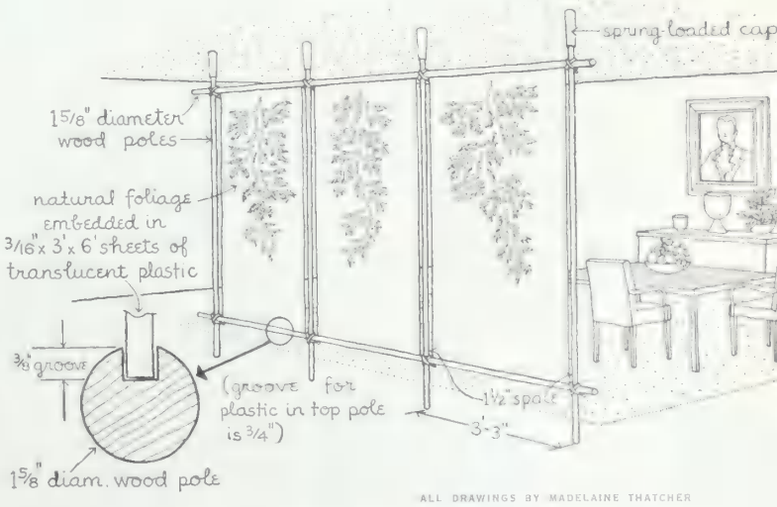
requirements and your space. These are supported on wood or metal poles in whatever order you choose. The coordinated, assembled sections can function as a buffet, bar, library, storage wall, entertainment or homework center—or even for dining. They can reach from wall to wall, or floor to ceiling. Going far beyond conventional furniture in their complete utilization of space, they can wrap around corners or extend into rooms. (Please turn to page 297)

With spring-loaded tops you can make tension poles. Their uses are unlimited



To make your own poles, buy spring-containing tops (about $2 each), slide them on the end of 1⅝″ poles or 2″-by-3″ boards of whatever length you require. An 8′ length of 2″-by-3″ costs about 60 cents at any lumber yard. An 8′ length of 1⅝″ pole costs about $1.50.

You can attach or hang whatever you please from these poles. They can be drilled into for dowels or screws, or nailed into. They can support shelving, furniture, play equipment, party and holiday decorations. In service areas and vacation cottages, they can be a quick and inexpensive means of partitioning off rooms or creating closet space without driving nails into floor or ceiling.



Spring-loaded tops are sold at lumber yards and hardware stores. For mail-order information, write: Sanlu Art Supply Co., 1165 Broadway, New York 1, N.Y.

Four poles, some plywood, and a pair of louvered doors can make a corner storage closet like this one. Alternately, walls can be plasterboard, or plain, perforated, or decorative hardboard.

Instant wardrobe closet is created with two spring-tension poles, three closet rods, and floor-length curtains. A similar arrangement could provide dressing room for pool visitors.

Structural changes are not necessary for a "conversation pit." Let the furniture form one—minus the pit. These casual furnishings start with a platform

■ Changing the level of your room with the use of furniture can be a new and adventurous experience. The great similarity of interiors today—in houses and apartments alike—calls for furniture that will add something different, practical, yet individual. The furnishings on these pages fall into this special class. "Leisure Room" is indeed a timely name for this collection by Thayer Coggin. If furniture depicts a way of living, then this grouping reflects the feeling of our time—especially that of the younger generation. This is furniture for relaxing, sitting, reading, talking. It has a long and low look, with the stamp of no period. It is inviting but—above all—simple, uncluttered, and casual. Strong direction, bold colors, flexibility are a few of its (Please turn to page 303)

Here are the basic ingredients that make up the "Leisure Room" Collection. There is [illegible] to be followed. Each piece is designed as a part of the unit, allowing you to create your own room.

The low scaling of this furniture and the streamline arrangement along both walls allow you to utilize space well within a room. Ceilings are higher and traffic areas are free from clutter. A too-rigid look is softened with the use of pattern on the long sofa and with a deep-pile rug.

All the seating and storage pieces in this group are arranged on a series of platforms that can be lined up along the walls or create a room within a room

The platform unifies storage and seating pieces which by themselves would be unrelated. Note the useful way in which the individual book units are stacked.

Furniture that is adaptable to any situation

Classic, fluid lines distinguish this furniture. The octagonal form is repeated on all posts, legs, and pedestal bases, thus softening the would-be rigid shape. Made of walnut, it has the added charm of brass and bead accents. Named "Octavian" by American of Martinsville, it is characterized by an in-between look that can be used in both modern or traditional settings.

For every child who has a friend

Trundle beds are great fun and a must for growing families. What better way is there for keeping a young overnight guest without fuss or bother? The trundle rolls out easily and can be used for storage when there is no need for a bed, since the mattress is removable. Kent-Coffey made it in walnut as part of a collection called "Tempo," designed especially for children.

Furniture pieces that combine for different uses

Combine an end table with a stacking chest, and you have a highboy that is suitable for man or woman. This is a piece that will give you a lot of mileage. The base, made of walnut with a caned shelf, can be used as an end table in either the living room or the bedroom. The lower shelf gives extra storage for those odd-shaped pieces that will not fit into drawers.

Same chest becomes a floor piece

The top section of the highboy in the photograph above is a three-drawer stacking chest, the sides and tops of which are wrapped in leather. Used at the foot of a bed, it can catch the overflow of clothing. Chest also comes in walnut with a finished back, permitting it to be free-standing. Both pieces on this page are from "Selectra" by Drexel.

If you are short of wall space, look to the window wall

Stacking and bunching chests are usually thought of in relation to solid walls. These two groupings change this idea, as they are designed to pack storage around a window, in space usually wasted. The great variety of shapes and sizes offers limitless arrangements geared to solve your particular problem. Furniture above by Henredon; below, by Founders Furniture Company. Both offer pieces designed to fit under ordinary window sills.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ

A versatile piece to fit students, or dwellers in small apartments

The concept of furniture that is designed to fill more than one specific need has become a reality within the past few years. Typical of this trend is the "Dina-China" unit from the "Designer's Collection" by Kroehler. The unit functions as a dining table, desk, and storage area. Being moderate in price, requiring floor area only 36″ by 14″, it is ideally suited to the person who is limited in budget and in space.

OWNER-ARCHITECT:
David George, Dallas, Tex.

The approach to the house, like the first statement of a musical theme, introduces the "idea" which is later developed within. From the entrance drive (lower photo) the characteristics of shape and construction are seen. One enters through pair of doors, center of photo, into an entrance garden, upper photo. This, after the carport, is the second in the spatial sequence. Window, shuttered from inside, echoes in reverse the angle of the roof pitch. This motif repeats several times—in windows and doors—as a subordinate melody.

Skylit area, the main path of circulation within the house, is the spatial spine to which other spaces are related. Several details of construction (such as the shapes of windows and doors), used in different contexts, rhythmically reinforce and continue the line of movement from the carport through the entrance garden.

A well-designed house is like a melody

We say this story is important to you, because

(1) it's a $25,000 house
(2) a great house—design-wise
(3) a great architectural analysis.

You'll be a better judge of all houses if you read it

By CURTIS BESINGER

■ This readily understood house clearly shows the difference between buildings that are only shelter and those that we call architecture.

Just why do we call some—but not all—buildings "architecture"? Although comparisons can be misleading and dangerous, it might be helpful to consider for a moment the somewhat similar relationship between sounds and music.

When sounds are organized and ordered in such a way that they speak to something deep within us (this "something" is not our minds) we call the result music. Their organization may constitute a simple melody or a great symphony. We give other names to other kinds of organizations of sounds; but when the sounds have no significance or meaning, they communicate nothing to us, and we call these sounds noise. We also call organized sounds noise if they interfere with the communication of something which we would prefer to hear because we consider it to be more important to us.

Now the bricks and boards and the numerous other materials that can be put into a building are sometimes assembled in such a way that, like sounds, they are mute. They say nothing to us. Or they may, as in this house designed by David George, be put together so that when we are in their presence they do speak to us. They do present some particular "thought" or evoke some particular sentiment. As a result, we say they "contain an idea." This idea is probably a sentiment that cannot very well be conveyed by words. In this regard it is similar to the ideas that are conveyed or evoked by music.

In any art, in order for the idea to be conveyed, it must be the pre-eminent thing in the putting together of the materials. It must seem to (Please turn the page)

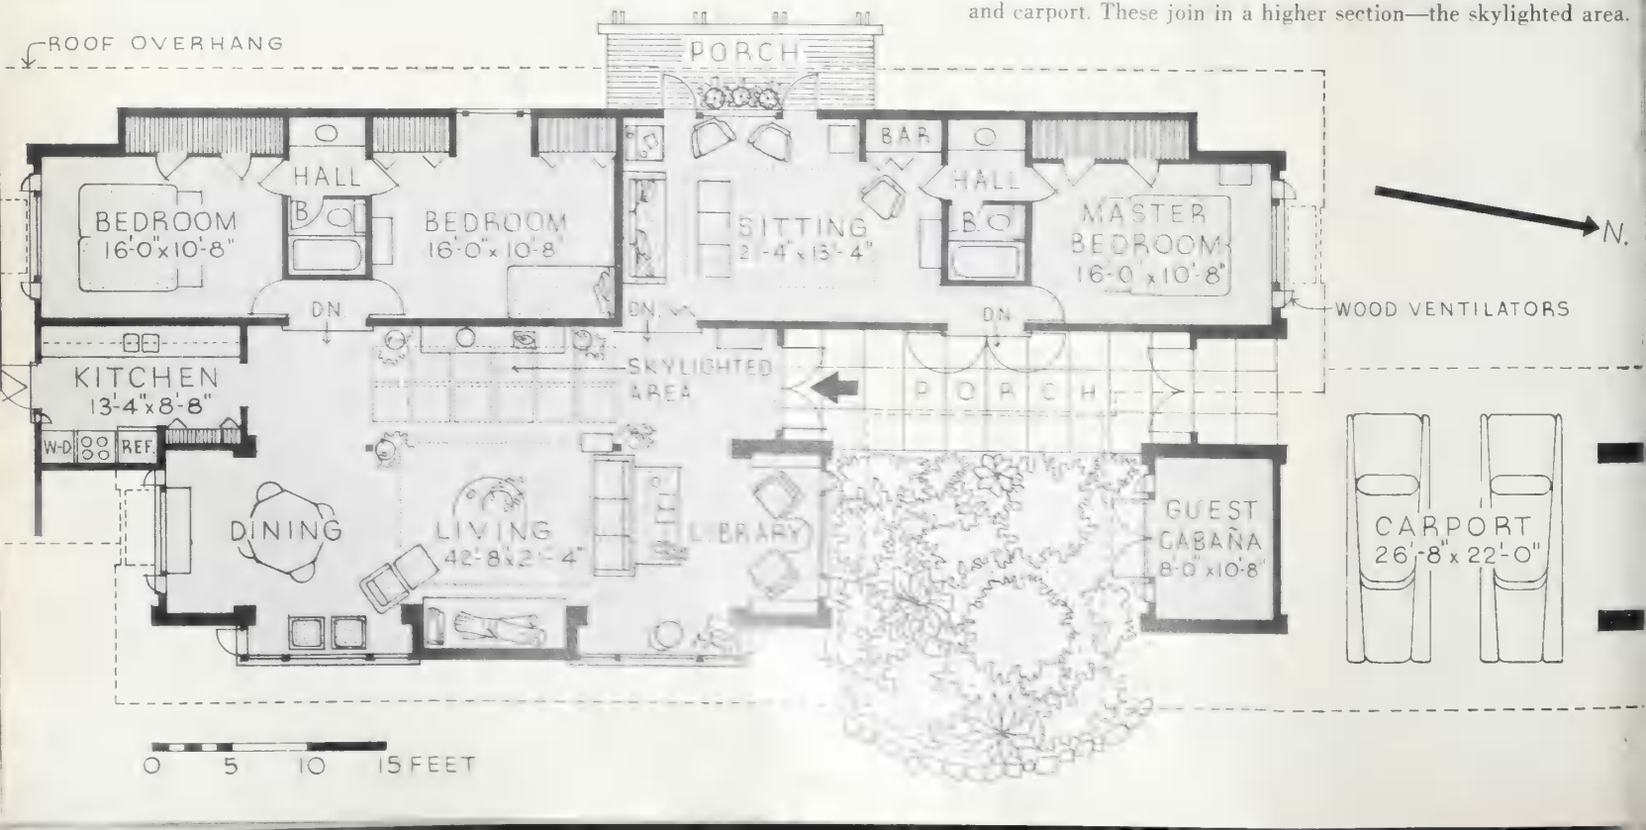
The living room is the important and climactic space of the house. Its importance is given more significance by the strong mass of the fireplace (at left) and the bright top-lighting of garden room. Through kitchen, at the other end of the skylit area (at right in photo above), one can see hill slope outside.

The living-room fireplace reflects the characteristic shape element, seen also in gable windows and roof structure.



Wide openings, similar to the doorway from garden room to master suite (photograph below) lead to all major areas.

Designed for a long and relatively narrow tree-covered lot that slopes upward from the street and offers limited outlook, the plan (2,500 sq. ft.) is somewhat inward-turning. Long vistas are provided within the house itself. Its space is essentially defined by two parallel roofs: one covers the bedrooms; the other, interrupted at the patio, covers the living area, guest cabaña, and carport. These join in a higher section—the skylighted area.

The library, like the dining area, is an alcove rather than a room. It looks into the entrance garden and the sylvan side-line planting. In this view one can see how the 2′ 8″ module of the house is the basis for its rhythms. Note how it reappears in the spacing of rafters, window mullions, and floor divisions.

pre-exist and to direct the manner in which the various constituent parts are assembled. Its existence and presence give congruity to the whole and its parts.

In architecture this thing called an idea is related to and evolved from the need to provide a place or a setting for some specific function of society. The function in the design of a house is family life. The provision of this place and the definition of a space for it may require some degree of shelter and protection. This will depend upon the climate and other conditions of the environment. To achieve shelter, some kind of (Please turn the page) construction is quite often, but not always, a necessity.

If one studies the house shown here, its ideas, like that of a simple melody, can be somewhat easily and readily apprehended. But to say in words precisely what one may have apprehended is a little more difficult. However, it will have included the following, among other things: a certain way of enclosing and shaping spaces by means of construction and of endowing these spaces with a certain quality of rhythm, scale, and proportion; a certain way of allowing for human movement into and within the spaces; a certain sentiment or feeling about family life and the nature of it as well as a concept of the relative importance of the various activities usually provided for within a house; a certain sense that all of these are somehow singularly appropriate and right in their relation to each of the others, and that no parts (Please turn to page 290)

◀ The gable end of the master bedroom has hinged wood panels to serve as shutters, giving privacy from front. The open glass area over shutters repeats the characteristic shape also found in gable ends of dining area and of central skylighted area.

In the sitting room of the master suite, the wood panels at the sides of glass opening serve as doors to a small wood deck overlooking a wooded ravine. In one corner (photo below) folding panels open to a kitchenette and bar unit. In the plan one can see how master suite could be used as a separate apartment.

Glass now has a hand-woven look

■ Not long ago, Owens-Corning Fiberglas celebrated its 25th year of turning glass into thread by introducing its latest fiber, Fiberglas Beta. And of the whole remarkable genre of glass fibers, this newcomer is the most astonishing to date.

Fabrics woven of Fiberglas Beta share with all other Fiberglas fabrics certain highly acceptable attributes: They hold their shape in all kinds of weather, can't be burned by sunlight or fire, and not only wash clean but never need ironing.

The new fiber, however, adds an even more noteworthy dimension: It is the most infinitesimally fine filament of any fiber—and that goes for synthetic, man-made, or natural. Fabrics woven of it can be so soft and pliable that it has even been possible to make them into downy, quilted bedspreads (see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, March 1964). Yet this silkiness is so tough it can be machine-laundered and spun-dry—something that never could happen before to a fabric made of glass fibers. This slim fiber is capable of being formed into a great variety of yarns, silk-like, wool-like, cotton-like. And what is more, these yarns actually are as pleasant to touch as they look, naturally suggesting themselves as candidates for the looms of hand weavers at a time when appreciation for the textures and patterns of the handcrafted has never been greater.

That is why, to dramatize this fiber's arrival on the scene and the American technical achievement that produced it, Owens-Corning asked five of America's most talented craftsmen-weavers to design a series of Fiberglas Beta curtain and drapery weaves, of which you see a sampling on these pages.

The designers, all teachers in design schools in five different regions of the country, are Judith A. Barrow, Penland School of Crafts, North Carolina; Donald Bujnowski, Rochester Institute of Technology; Trude Guermonprez, California College of Arts and Crafts; Marie Howell, Rhode Island School of Design; and Glen Kaufman, Cranbrook Academy of Art, Michigan. Originating on the hand loom, the designs reflect the tenor of modern American craftsmanship interpreted in a truly indigenous material. They have been adapted to the power looms of several textile mills, and you will find them currently on the market in ready-made curtains or available by the yard, proudly bearing the label "American Craftsmen Collection." ■

The Music Is Too LOUD

If you're suffering from an overdose of Hi Fi, you'll find some real relief here—why the music is too loud and what, if anything, you can do about it

By LEWIS A. HARLOW

• The music is too loud, you say? This is a matter of opinion, but let's assume from the very start that there is no basis for argument. You are absolutely right—the music is too loud.

All of the electronic music makers in use around the household have excess capacity designed into them, and in this respect they are exactly like the family car that you support mostly and at considerable expense to get you to and from the school and the supermarket. The speedometer on your dash registers to 120 MPH or thereabouts, and if you are even slightly curious about its accuracy, either you go to jail or you kill yourself.

This capacity of excess horsepower is equally present in the electronic music makers, and it is there for an equally good technical reason. The design engineers include it to compensate for tube fatigue and to provide good transient response, and then they cross their fingers and hope that the operator will regard the latent destructiveness of his volume control with respect and sympathy.

There will be no further reference in this article to tube fatigue or transient response or anything else of a technical nature. If the music is too loud, the reasons are starkly untechnical—and so are the cures.

How loud is "too loud"?

Loudness is a relative condition that can be measured on scientific instruments, but the engineers who read the dials and interpret the results will admit very frankly that their answers rarely impress and convince a big percentage of just plain listeners. What you think is too loud is too loud for you in one of two ways. The loudness may distress you emotionally or physically, even to the point of causing a kind of pain. Or your distress may be the result of social responsibility; it may hurt you to feel that the people in the next apartment or the next building are being annoyed by music that they should not have to hear at all. Two kinds of loudness are responsible for these reactions, loud highs and loud lows, and it is helpful to be able to tell them apart.

If your reaction to too-loud music is that it is shrill, you are allergic to loud highs, though perhaps no one else in the room is bothered by them. This is a quirk in your emotional or physiological make-up for which there is no medical or surgical remedy. You are allergic to loud highs. You may go away from the music. Fortunately you do not have to go far; highs, loud or otherwise, are delicate in themselves. They travel only in straight lines, and even unobstructed they tire quickly, wither, and die. They do not go around corners or through walls or windows. If your objection to shrill music is its possible annoyance to your neighbors, forget it, and enjoy the music. The shrillness isn't getting through to where it can do damage.

Loud lows are another matter. They won't make your own ears ring if you happen to be close to them, but they will travel through closed doors, up and down stairs, through wood and plaster and brick, and in general keep the community profanely awake when it would like to be sleeping. The juke box is the obvious example, and even closer to home is the operator of the hi-fi system who chooses to make like a juke box either for demonstration or for just animal satisfaction. This phenomenon is easy to check. Listen analytically to the music filtering through from your nearest offending neighbor. Better still, try going to the rest room in a night club during a good, noisy dance act. To the farthermost cubicle, the thump of the rhythm still penetrates, though the shrill highs and the moderate melodies in the middle have long faded.

There are obvious social and commercial reasons for loud music from the juke box and in the night club. Here are seven reasons for loud music out of the various electronic music-making devices around the home. If this music is too loud for your enjoyment, you can, in some cases, do something about it besides complain or go away. And in other cases, you will understand and perhaps enjoy its loudness.

Careless indifference

Most electronic sound-making devices in household use are designed in such a way that volume control is a continuation of the turn-on process. This grim arrangement was first discovered in the era of rigid economy that produced small radios by the millions to sell for about ten dollars each. The tradition once established, it was also standardized into the design of TV sets, though here the matter of economy was less important than the desire to simplify the multiplicity of knobs which are all necessary if the TV set is to perform enjoyably. For no good reason, the single knob which controls on-off and volume is also found on most phonographs and other sources of hi-fi electronic music.

Here is the way the damage is done. You turn on the TV set. A click and a continuing twist of the knob. Maybe too much twist. Nothing happens for eleven seconds, but you do not hang around and wait; eleven seconds is enough for that other chore asking for action in some other part of the house. Now the TV begins to bleat and rattle, and you are reminded to go back and moderate its sound.

But suppose someone else had turned the set on? If this is a member of your own family you are, of course, aware of his or her deficiencies, like the congenital tin ear or careless indifference to TV that is too loud. The solution is easy; you stop what you are doing and go over and turn the TV down to where it is no more than competitive with the life of the household. Your action will probably be unnoticed; certainly it will be unresented. The turner-on will be as carelessly indifferent to TV that is not too loud.

Now suppose you are visiting. Maybe you are already present when the TV is turned on and abandoned before completion of its eleven-second warm-up. Or maybe you arrive with the TV already blasting and shivering. If you have reason to suspect the cause, go directly to it and turn it down. Don't ask someone else to do this; take matters firmly into your own hands. Again, your action will probably be unnoticed. If your host or hostess is aware of what you have done, he or she will be too polite to mention it. You may be talked about after you have gone home, but rather than criticism you will probably (Please turn to page 294)

How to explore and exploit the nature of materials

Discover a new world of pleasure: Torn-Paper Collage

Start by making your own Christmas cards and you will go on to create bigger collages to hang on your walls

▪ There is something very exciting about discovering a new dimension in an everyday material. In this case, the material is paper, the commonest of common materials and yet, handled as Mrs. Mary Jane Mayer does, it becomes a subtle and responsive medium of expression.

Mrs. Mayer, who made the series of Christmas cards shown on these four pages, lives in Hawaii. There are two of her torn-paper collage panels in each of the 425 guest rooms of the sumptuous new Kahala Hilton Hotel in Honolulu. Each of the 850 panels is different, and each is color-keyed to harmonize with the furnishings of the room in which it hangs.

The execution of such a huge commission was bound to result in all sorts of exciting discoveries for the artist, so we asked Mrs. Mayer to adapt her technique to the making of Christmas cards and to set down, step by step, the method she used (see page 288) so that you can start doing this creative play. You will probably find the technique so fascinating that, after you've done your Christmas cards, you will want to utilize your new-found skill in making panels to hang in important areas in your own home.

Mary Jane Mayer has found that tearing rather than cutting out her bits of colored paper helps the color areas relate to each other. It's really the ragged edges that do it. Look closely at her work shown here, and you'll see a sort of optical blending take place. It's the kind of effect the Impressionists got with their tiny pinpoints of color.

Acquiring the materials for your collages is an enjoyable experience. You will suddenly (Please turn the page) find that you are more conscious of color. That pink tissue in the laundry box won't be tossed out, nor will the gold foil on the candy box. You will eye each piece of paper with new interest, as you assemble your palette.

Notice how the poinsettia petals, left, cut out with scissors, contrast with soft haziness of multi-layered background. Gold paper of vase illuminates matte surfaces which surround it.

You will find construction paper in assorted colors and colored blotting paper in your variety store. If your town has an art-supply shop, you'll find a wonderful range of colored tissue papers. Buy as many colors as you can find and keep them lying on your desk or worktable, where they'll catch your eye every time you pass. You'll discover yourself stopping to rearrange them, to put one color next to another in a new way, to let a brilliant one peek out from behind a group of subdued ones. You have already started to compose your collage scheme, even though you haven't yet had time to sit down and formally begin your project. You may start out thinking you'll (Please turn to page 287)

House Beautiful has prepared a kit of difficult-to-obtain papers to use in making these torn-paper collages. There are 44 sheets, each about 12″ by 18″. All are Japanese papers and include the special papers mentioned in the story, such as mayu paper, gold and silver tea-chest papers, and others. More than 15 color shades are represented, so that you can create literally thousands of combinations. Kit includes 40 varicolored envelopes, in two sizes. Creators Who Influence Your Life

The most copied designer in America—and why

By ELIZABETH GORDON

• The name Boris Kroll is not a household word like Kodak or Birdseye—not yet, but it might well be one day. For Boris Kroll is already highly thought of throughout the decorating and design world. And generally he is accorded the top-of-the-heap position by his own fabric industry.

To be so widely acclaimed by his peers in an industry bursting with abilities and yeastiness means that he must possess some unique capabilities.

Boris Kroll manufactures about 400,000 yards of decorative fabrics a year—all of which he has personally designed. That is not much, compared to giants in the field who produce millions of yards. But bigness is not the point about Kroll. Quality is the point: quality of design, and intrinsic quality. His patterns and textures don't go out of style. Of the twelve patterns he started with in the early '30's, when he was only a hand-weaver with no power looms to multiply his ideas, eight are still in the line—contemporary and undated.

His designs are not tightly linked to period labels. They have a universality that makes them applicable to many situations and makes them liked by Early American fans, orientalists, modernists, anybody. That is because he does not think in any of the clichés prevalent in today's design world. As the designer-owner, the creative idea is allowed full growth and development and does not get dissipated by passing "through channels" and committee meetings. He is the policymaker—and the one who executes the policy.

This gives him a breadth and scope of opportunity unknown (with but two or three exceptions) in modern industry. He can phone a design idea to the mill

The Famous Wines of the Loire and the Rhone

By EDMUND PENNING-ROWSELL

• Visits to the wine districts of France are becoming increasingly popular, particularly with those taking trips by car. The favorite areas are, of course, Burgundy, Bordeaux, and Champagne, all on the way to or from holiday centers in France and beyond. It is not difficult to find opportunities to taste in these areas, although one must be warned that the most brightly-painted, public-relations-projected cellars and bars do not always offer the best wine.

What is even more profitable and interesting is to visit the lesser areas, where there are wines that are far less common here because they cannot compete in price with wines of the major exporting districts, or do not travel well, or they are simply not known.

Personal introductions to these districts are not necessary. In the lesser areas, links with foreign merchants are tenuous, and on the other hand the growers and merchants themselves are now increasingly anxious to put themselves on the wine map and to attract tourists who dash briefly through their districts. It would be surprising if the local syndicat d'initiative could not arrange visits to the neighboring caves. Visitors should remember, of course, that growers and merchants live by selling wine and cannot be expected to open bottle upon bottle out of respect for l'entente cordiale. Nevertheless, publicity is being organized and bars de dégustation opened. It should be borne in mind, however, that the quality of the wine cannot be gauged entirely by the colorfulness of the publicity, the good looks of the local girls in peasant costumes, or the amount of assembled wine-making implements.

Wine tends to be grown in river valleys, and the most interesting of the lesser wine areas and the best of the "wine rivers" is certainly the Loire, interesting for its great châteaux and splendid churches as well for the variety of its wines. A highly enjoyable tour may be begun at Nantes, near the mouth, and completed not far from the Massif Central. By then the inquiring amateur of architecture and wine "will" have had his fill.

The "lowest" wine on the Loire is one of the least good—Muscadet. Much of it goes to Brittany to accompany the fish that are so plentiful there and some of it is said to go in the reverse direction to appear later as Chablis. At its best, Muscadet is fresh and (Please turn to page 306)

Vacations that put you on top

All over the world, spas and similar rejuvenating resorts can pamper you into healthier, happier, handsomer condition—while you're having the time of your life

By MARION GOUGH

Aerial view of The Homestead, Hot Springs, Virginia, suggests the scope of this self-contained spa, which is also a little realm of diversion, indoor and out, year round. There's skiing in the winter. Medically supervised warm baths pamper the healthy, comfort the arthritic. Hotel perpetuates traditional Southern elegance, and caters specially to families.

• Americans are discovering that there are more entertaining ways to achieve physical fitness and a state of euphoria than those fifty-mile hikes we've been hearing about.

Take your next vacation at a spa, and you'll rediscover something the Europeans have known for centuries—that a holiday full of get-away-from-it-all divertisements can also recondition you physically and send you back to the daily routine feeling like a new person. You can return home pounds lighter and inches slimmer—in themselves accomplishments to put greater bounce in the step and sparkle in the eye of most of us. In addition, you may improve your golf score or your ear for Mozart, but whatever happens to you, a spa vacation amounts to true recreation.

In the U.S.A. the word "spa" has been used to describe everything from a New England soda fountain to a rooftop gymnasium. Technically, a spa is a place where waters of high mineral concentration and often high heat spring naturally from the earth and are used therapeutically—as in the "baden," "bains," and "terme" of Europe, where people regularly go for "the cure," to take the baths and to drink the waters. But the meaning of the word has been broadened to cover the new kind of "beauty with health" resorts that are growing up in this country. For, even if it is just ordinary H_2O, water plays a big part in the agitated baths, saunas, hosings-down, and steamings that are frequently part of their restorative regimes, just as they are at all the bona fide, mineral-spring spas. At new-fangled spas the goal tends to be weight reduction, and the regime is usually a program of baths, massage, and exercise, which includes supervised gymnastics and sometimes yoga, as well as swimming or games. And it's all done to the tune of a low-calorie menu. Resorts to note: The Golden Door (see right); Hambletonian Spa, Goshen, New York; Rancho La Puerta, Tecate, Baja California, Mexico.

The kind of spa vacation we're talking about is for people who are basically healthy, suffering perhaps from a little excess avoirdupois and maybe a touch of "manager's disease," as the Europeans call the need for relaxation brought about by workaday pressures. Some spas insist on a medical examination before their (Please turn to page 307)

Like most European spas, Badgastein, Austria's great radon spa, has a charming setting and old-world grand-manner facilities. Guests take the cure at municipal thermal establishments or in waters piped into its more than 160 hotels.

Beauty resorts pamper you, work you hard—and you like it

• Do you remember Kipling's "Just-So" story about the kangaroo who toured the forest, asking all the other animals if they could make him beautiful by five o'clock?

There are several places for human beings that don't attempt to do it by 5 P.M. But if you'll give them seven to fourteen days of your fullest cooperation by doing what you're told—they can work almost miraculous changes in the same old you.

The Golden Door is one of the best of the several health-beauty resorts scattered around the U.S. It can accommodate, at most, only 20-23 people, and there are 2-2½ persons on the staff for every guest. So someone is working with you, on you, or for you the whole day. There are teachers for exercises, swimming, water exercises, yoga, and gym. There are masseuses, beauty operators, steam-room attendants, etc. from 9:20 A. M. till 5:20 P.M. in 40-minute periods—with one rest period and time out for lunch.

The schedule sounds strenuous, but in reality it is not. For they change your routine so often to quite different types of activity that you feel only blissfully tired by 5:20 P.M. They schedule the hour (Please turn to page 309)

Put your plants where they'll feel at home

When plants are perfectly suited to their environment, they flourish, become "naturalized," and require minimum care and attention. By choosing the right plants for the site, this happy condition was created here. Garden of Dr. and Mrs. Graham Clark.

Now is the time to face the realities in your gardening

Between now and the next planting season you can make plans for a garden that will give you more pleasure for less time and effort

By ELSIE LOUISE SCULTHORP

• So your garden is put away for the winter! Your outdoor furniture is stacked away from the tolls of weather. Now you can stand back and view your struggle with nature, using the perspective of hindsight.

Are you satisfied with what you did? Did the appearance of your property please you as you drove up to it after an absence? Did you have a gratifying succession of flowers to arrange indoors? Was the prospect pleasing from the inside, through all windows on all sides of the house? Did you spend too much time maintaining and not enough enjoying and inviting your soul?

How you answer such questions is the key to how you should rethink your gardening plans for next year. Do it now, before the vision of colorful blossoms begins to stir you next year.

It is our observation that most property owners fall short of their intended goals in gardening because of the lure of the lovely but insidious blossom. Without realizing it, generally, the goal becomes the flower on the end of the stem. Certainly beginning gardeners (first home owners and renters) make this their goal. They may find, after a few years of growing annuals and a few perennials as the pièce de résistance of their garden, that their property does not look as well as it should—and especially in (Please turn the page)

Plant and/or prune your trees to frame a view

A wide view of a distant scene can be dramatized by planting and/or pruning to focus attention on a selected aspect. A frame of trees or shrubbery can have an interesting form of its own, which takes on added meaning in contrast to the distance, just as the distance is accented by the foreground. Garden of Mr. and Mrs. Selah Graham Jr. (above) by landscape architects Thomas D. Church and Associates. At right, the garden of Mr. and Mrs. David Mahany, with a distant meadow seen through a gate. Below, a view of Diamond Head (Hawaii) was achieved by the Philip Spauldings by pruning the tops of the trees below.

Raise your awareness of nature to a higher level

The seeing eye and curious mind can find diversion in a very small garden. An alternative to an extensive garden that may not be well kept is the more careful and intensive development of a small one. The pleasure to the eye is to be found at right by the planting of succulents in the seam of a rock, in contrast to feathery ferns. Garden of Dr. and Mrs. Graham Clark.

Man-made beauty gives more meaning to nature's

Beautiful foliage of hosta and ajuga (below) has more importance and meaning by virtue of its relationship to the bird bath and sculpture. Each gains from the other. Foliage of the plants also contrasts nicely. Hosta is green and big. Ajuga is small and bronzy. The F. C. Powells, owners; Florence Baker, landscape architect.

in the winter when the beds are bare, brown, and muddy. To organize your thoughts about next year's plans, you have to settle such basics as these:

What kind of a family are you?

What role do you want the garden to play in your life?

Are you a full-time or a part-time gardener?

How do you expect to use the garden—for experimentation, for entertaining, or just to look at?

Are there children and pets to consider?

What are its present faults and what are its potential best points?

Do you want it to elevate the dignity of your house?

When you have settled such questions, then you will know what kind of plants to select.

Why do we plant? There are many reasons. Most of them are purely practical, though we like to think otherwise. We plant trees for shade and shelter for our physical needs.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Produce drama by contrasting a dominant with a soft form

One bold, spiky plant, with a delicate ground cover beneath, is an example of how to use contrast. All the other plants are mounded and rounded in form. The garden of Floyd Gerow; Thomas D. Church and Associates were the landscape architects.

How to get the most out of contrast

The two dramatic plants shown below are more effective together than they would be singly. The lacy foliage of one is accentuated in comparison to the solidity of the other. Home of Mr. and Mrs. George Richter; W. Bennett Covert, landscape architect.

We plant shrubs as hedges to give us privacy. We plant so that we may enjoy our own vegetables, fruit, and flowers. We plant shrubs to attract birds. We plant to prevent erosion. We plant to cover the ground for esthetic and practical reasons. We plant for the enjoyment of the beauty and fragrance of flowers, the texture and color of foliage.

Or it may be that we plant so that our garden may take advantage of a distant view, or so our garden can be separated from neighboring gardens.

We plant (or should) so that our houses will be set off by, or blend with, an appropriate background or so that we may enjoy a pleasant outlook from our windows. We plant to hide nearby buildings, eyesores or not, from our gaze. We plant to give color and charm to an uninteresting view. We plant to create our own view where there is none.

In short, we plant from our human angle, to have a private, personal place of our own. (Please turn the page)

Strive for unity without monotony

We are more likely to err on the side of chaos, with too many different plants, than on the side of monotony, with too few. The ideal is a unified overall quality—which has enough individual differences to maintain interest—as with the mounded heathers and cotoneasters here. Trees and a few shrubs prevent monotony. Landscape architect, Arthur W. Erfeldt.

PHOTOGRAPH BY JEANNETTE GROSSMAN

All of our reasons for having a garden affect its form, style, and character. It naturally follows that our choice of plants affects how we accomplish our purpose.

Some people have a knack for knowing at once what is good and what must be done to realize their garden dream. For many others this is very difficult. But good taste can be cultivated by continual reading, observing, experimenting, and by visiting as many good gardens as possible. Thus one can develop an appreciation and awareness of what is good and what is not. As your taste develops, so will your understanding, and as time goes on you'll find that you make fewer and fewer mistakes.

There are several important words applicable to what to choose and what to combine it with. (Please turn the page)

Surround your outdoor life with nature

The best way to enjoy a garden is to have it close at hand. This hand-made shady delight, designed by the owners, adjoins the terrace at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Graham Clark. It's a pleasure to see at this distance, or more intimately along the path.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY THE HOWLAND ASSOCIATES

Respect the contours of the land

The greatest enemy of the garden, and perhaps of the world at large, is the bulldozer. It's a great mistake to level land indiscriminately when established grades can lend so much character, as in this garden of the Leslie H. Hills.

PHOTOGRAPH BY TOM BURNS JR.

There's nothing like a native plant to keep down failure and maintenance

A plant becomes a "native" by thriving without the attention of man. Thus it follows that natives will do beautifully on their own in a garden if given the general conditions of soil, exposure and climate to which they are accustomed in the wild. This is a vine maple (Acer circinatum), one of Oregon's loveliest natives, in the entrance garden of Mr. and Mrs. Tom Burns Jr.

1. Unity—use a few types of plants in profusion. This can be deadly monotonous, unless very calculatingly done. But well done, it gives character as well as a sense of peace. Too many kinds of plants produce a cluttery feeling.

2. Variety—In a sense, this is the opposite of unity. The goal is to avoid monotony by creating contrasts. But you can go wrong here without restraint.

3. Appropriateness — which means:

a) Suitability to our needs, our way of living and the climate.

b) Suitability to the location.

c) Suitability to the soil.

d) Suitability to the immediate planting area.

e) Suitability to the character and style of the house.

Sometimes appropriateness, a greatly-to-be-desired characteristic can be achieved by using native materials. For instance, in seashore gardens, don't use delicate plants that require shade and protection from strong winds. Use plants that have always been at home on the beach and are known to have withstood the rigors of its climate.

4. Character and style

"Character" is the sum of the distinctive qualities of a place, person or thing; the distinguishing attributes indicating a special quality which serves to identify. So the character of a garden might be said to be the impression received by its overall effect.

"Style" is the more specific quality that helps to give the distinctive character and excellence to artistic expression. It is the distinctive method of presentation, construction, or treatment of any art or product. The style of a garden may be that of a period (Tudor, Romantic, Modern); of a culture (Spanish, English, Japanese, Italian); of an historic setting (Williamsburg) or it may be completely impersonal.

5. Finish which means upkeep and its extent. (See "What type of Gardener are You?," HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, April, 1963.)

It is easier to plant a formal garden well than to do a successful informal planting. But we must first know if it is suitable to be formal, or whether an informal and picturesque scheme might not be more appropriate and serve us better.

Whatever you do, there should be a good reason for it. No amount of thinking and planning is of any use unless it has been done with a purpose. In private gardens, the reasons are usually practical considerations (financial or otherwise) and esthetic satisfaction. But there are other reasons too, such as ease of maintenance and suitability.

We can emphasize the development of our lot or property in relation to the far or near landscape by what we plant and where we plant it, or how we prune what is already planted, thus making our own view—to a distant mountain, a lake, the ocean, a river, a magnificent tree, or a meadow. Most pictures need a frame, and if in your landscape, there is some object of interest that the eye can catch and enjoy, we should plant or prune with that in mind. (My cedar and holly trees are now being pruned so I can see the old red and white lighthouse, with its light at night).

If you can't settle down in a garden, it's no garden

A garden, above all, is a place for leisurely looking, thinking, and enjoyment. This calls for inviting places to sit. A flat rock or stump, for solitary respite, as well as seats and benches for a group—such as these at the Dr. Graham Clark's—encourage the contemplation that a garden deserves. Steps also invite sitting and close inspection of the plants.

The shrubbery surrounding a lawn and flower garden makes a frame for this picture, darker at the sides, with its interest of form and color, and light in between. Light areas are very important; they make the garden sparkle. A small area of light is more important than a large area of dark for this reason.

There are several ways of grouping plants:

1. By botanical relation, as is done in arboretums and by some garden specialists.

2. By ecological relation. Ecology is the area of biology that deals with the mutual relation between organisms and their environment, or, saying it in a much simpler way: "Plant together those things that grow together in nature."

3. By similarity or difference of the plants themselves. This is the way in which we get our artistic effects of harmony or contrast.

All of this requires a knowledge of plants, or knowing where to find the necessary information.

One of the fundamental things is to plant remembering how the plants will look after years of growth. Plant, too, so that the eye can move from one plant to another without awkwardness—making easy transitions.

Remember that nearby planting in small areas is most important. The plants are close, so make your selections of plants with harmony, character, and color in mind. Planting near the house or on a fence softens the hard outlines. Shrubbery at the sides and back of a garden frames the green of the lawn and furnishes a background for flowers.

Flowers are most important in the garden, playing many roles. The more we know about them the better able we will be to make appropriate selections. Flowers can be used in many ways: for flower and foliage masses; as color ac-

Plants can do wonders for a fence or wall

When climbing roses are trained on an open fence, they fill it in and, for all practical purposes, lend the substance of a solid fence. But in winter when there's little activity in the back yard, the vine is bare and there's no visual screen. Roses cascading over the brick wall, above, soften the edge and relate the masonry to the taller trees and shrubs behind. Plants effectively increase height of wall without creating a forbidding look.

cents against shrubbery; walls and fences and in utilitarian ways (such as ground covers and to hold soil on slopes); in wild plantings; for special plantings, such as rock gardens, bog gardens, rose gardens, fragrant gardens, primrose gardens. In all these ways we can use strong growing perennials, such as yucca or dictamnus, as accents.

The appeal of flowers is mostly in masses of color, in contrasting groups in the garden, and to give us esthetic pleasure. We can have spring gardens, summer gardens, fall gardens. Where quick effects are desired, we can have gardens of annuals to give us masses of showy bloom, particularly useful when the house is used only seasonally. But masses of annuals leave you with empty masses of soil during the winter—not satisfying esthetically.

If you will select trees, shrubs, vines and flowers, for a certain purpose and location, you will save yourself much work, and your garden will be most satisfying.

When choosing trees and shrubs, keep in mind their ultimate size, since they are fairly permanent and costly to move. To help you visualize any plant in your garden, try to find well-grown specimens of what you want in a nearby arboretum, in a good nursery, or in a good garden book or catalog. You'll be well repaid by the extra trouble. This is really the only way to know whether or not the plant is suitable for your garden.

There are many kinds of gardens. Each has its devotees, and one or another has its place in your own scheme of things. A garden may be only a path, bordered with ferns and wild flowers, winding along the banks of a stream. It can be a flower-bordered walk leading to the front door, like the English cottage gardens, full of color and the fragrance of flowers to greet the visitor. It can be a woodsy path, bordered with foxgloves, through a grove of trees.

The shape your garden will probably take will be governed by the topography of your land—whether it is flat, sloping, low or hilly, and of course, these conditions also influence the kinds of flowers you can best grow there. It is easier and less expensive to make a garden conform to the land than to make the land conform to a preconceived idea. Accept the land as it is and emphasize existing conditions.

No matter what form it takes, it should express your personality, answer your needs and give you pleasure. It should be a place where many or few flowers can be grown; where you may experiment with all sorts of plants, or where you may have your own arboretum. Or it may be a place strictly for entertaining with a few plants in containers to give softness and color.

It should, no matter what its form, be planned with some feeling for proportion.

OFTEN we are limited by conditions that already exist—a large tree may be where we hoped to have a sunny flower border. Don't despair—at least there's the great advantage of possessing a mature tree, and ingenuity can no doubt find a better and more interesting place for a sunny flower border. Or perhaps a shady garden, lovelier and easier to care for than a sunny border, will best fit your conditions.

Many of us have kept scrapbooks of garden pictures and ideas that have appealed to us, hoping to use them some day. It is possible that some of the clippings may help us decide what type of garden we'd like. We can even incorporate ideas from other gardens into our scheme. But it is usually unsuccessful to force another's garden plan on your location and usually it leads to difficulties and disappointment. Each garden should be developed to conform to the land and the existing conditions—the house, the trees, the topography. Prevailing winds, weather, and growing conditions generally must also be considered.

If the garden is but a flower bordered path, make the path comfortable wide. Leonardo da Vinci said: "Let the street be as wide as the height of the houses." Paraphrasing this to: "Let the path be as wide as the height of the tallest flowers" gives us a good rule to follow. Strolling down a garden path Indian file is not conducive to pleasant enjoyment of the garden or to comfortable conversation.

A flower border about five feet wide will allow room for a sufficient number of plants to give a good show of color, when viewed from one side. A width of ten feet or more is best if the flowers are to be viewed from both sides. In a very wide bed, it would be well to have inconspicuous stepping stones for access to the plants.

These dimensions may seem large when compared with measurements inside the house, but outdoors more generous dimensions give a better effect in relation to the lot dimensions, the height of the house, and the trees. It is better to err on the side of too big rather than too small. The seemingly excessive width rapidly diminishes when it is staked out on the ground and planted. The length should be in proportion to the width. It is these basic considerations that give the garden a spacious and restful feeling.

In the business of design, you should studiously avoid the manner that is mean and pitiful and always aim at that which is great and noble. Don't make little cabinets and mazes, basins like bowldishes, or alleys so narrow that two persons can scarce go abreast in them.

Consider, too, planting emphasis—giving certain suitable plants a position where the interest will be concentrated on them. Accents are needed to keep the design awake but beware of having too many. They will bombard the eye rather than rest it. Accent plants can be used in entrance plantings—at the beginning of a path or driveway; on either side of the front door or garden gate; or to emphasize the design of flower beds.

Planting can also be directional to lead a visitor to the front door or to direct deliverymen to the kitchen door.

PLANTS furnish the garden with form, color, texture, motion, and animation:—the physical delights of the five senses: sight (color and form); touch (the softness of leaves such as Stachys lanata); hearing (the sound of the wind in the trees); taste (herbs); and smell (the fragrance of flowers or aromatic foliage).

Select plants, too, for their seasonal effects, for their individual special appeal, for picturesque, form, for pure color, and for sentimental reasons. These various attractions vary with the seasons, and each adds to the delights of the garden.

Watch the spacing of the plants—it is very important to the final effect. Don't crowd them; give each one room to develop naturally or they will often deform each other.

Garden planting plans require a great deal of thought, and selection of the plants is an endless and fascinating pursuit. You'll be well rewarded for all the time that is spent in planning and planting. But you must keep basics very firmly in mind. ■

make all your cards alike but you'll find a group of colors you know will delight a special friend or express a special idea. You'll end by making each card unique. And it's more fun that way.

Paper is expendable

Don't be frightened away by the artistry you see in Mrs. Mayer's work. It is beautiful, and we are not saying that you can duplicate it. But you will honestly be surprised at your own creative efforts in this technique. If you've always said, "I can't draw a straight line," then this is the craft for you. The more irregular your line, the better your collage will be. The lovely thing about paper is that it's expendable. If you spoil a piece, you throw it away. You won't lie awake brooding about it, yet it's just as much fun to work with as $9-a-yard silk.

You will notice, in looking at the color reproductions of Mrs. Mayer's work, the lovely, soft, ragged effects of her blossoms and the pleasant, veiled quality of her backgrounds. Her use of Japanese rice paper is responsible for these unusual nuances. Rice paper is available in most art-supply stores. There is a lovely soft tissue paper-like one called mino and an extremely thin, veil-like paper called odori, which is almost transparent when dry and produces striking, shadowy effects. You will find most exciting and useful the threaded, textured paper called unryu. Rice papers are relatively inexpensive, so buy a variety and learn to know them. Carry a few snippets around in your purse and handle them while you're sitting in a waiting room or riding on a bus. You will find that some have a greater appeal for you than others. You will acquire a feeling for texture.

The soft-textured rice papers and tissue papers tear in a most exciting way, especially when you draw your line first with a brush dipped in clear water and then tear along the moistened line, as you will be shown in the instructions that follow. Experiment with tearing all your papers. Try for uneven effects. Tearing slowly produces more variations of line. Tearing quickly gives you a straighter line. But tear, tear, tear. You'll become a connoisseur of tearing.

The less we tell you about subject matter, the freer you will feel, but do notice that Mrs. Mayer has almost invariably relied on nature for her inspiration, and nature has an inexhaustible supply of ideas waiting for you too.

Eliminate preliminaries

At first you may want to pin your compositions to the background before pasting them down, but when you have mastered Mrs. Mayer's very simple method of pasting with diluted plastic glue (see instructions), you will probably eliminate the preliminary tacking down. Mrs. Mayer sometimes uses layer on layer of delicate, transparent paper to give a soft, mysterious effect. Be sure to try this.

There are times when you will want to use scissors. They are useful for smooth-petaled flowers, for crisp leaves, or for the contours of a vase. Above all, they're useful for contrast to all the soft, torn edges. Really, the whole business of learning to create with papers is a matter of contrasts: ragged and even, rough and smooth, thick and thin, light and dark, shiny and dull, brilliant and muted, large and small. These are the exciting combinations which you'll be working with.

You will find that all those decisions you make, all those discoveries about color and texture, are going to heighten your enjoyment of the world around you. You will be constantly making compositions: food on a plate, pillows on a sofa. Color combinations will sing out to you from the roadside or from the vegetable section of the supermarket. Hold onto your newfound awareness by making constant use of it. You may never have dreamed that tearing papers such as these could lead to such exciting possibilities.

▪ The photos showing the step-by-step process of making torn-paper collages also show how simple the tools and procedures are. You will develop your own techniques as you become more proficient. You will find that diluted white glue is not all the fearsome sticky stuff we struggled with as children. Applied with a stiff brush, it is really very pleasant to use. Tweezers are helpful in picking up and positioning the torn paper. The stiff brush is useful for patting pasted paper firmly into place. It will help bind the layers firmly together. You will

2 Tear along moistened line, pulling gently to leave edge all around. With heavy-fibered rice paper it may be necessary to snip with scissors the heavy cross-fibers that do not tear easily. Tear in the same way the pieces to be used for background of your design. This might be a good time to tear matching pieces of very thin paper for overlays later on.

3 With stencil brush or blunt brush dipped in solution of one-third white glue (Elmer's Glue-All or Sobo) and two-thirds water, pat down papers one on top of the other. Rice papers are so absorbent that it isn't necessary to turn them over and glue on the back. Apply paste to top; it will sink through. Work on slick, nonabsorbent surface—glass or enamel.

notice that the paste stays moist for quite a while after it is applied, so you can make some changes after you see your design assembled.

Use the heavier sheets of paper for the card itself and the lighter weight sheets for the layered design. Study each finished card from a distance. Try looking at it in the mirror. You can judge the balance of your design much better in reverse. When dry, you can press cards under a weight between sheets of waxed paper.

After the paste is dry, you may wish to emphasize a form with a line of India ink or cast a shadow with a light wash of watercolor. You may want to try dried leaves or petals in your collage. (See a complete story on this in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, JULY '62.)

4 Plan your design and tear out shapes using same method as above. It is easier to pencil in your shapes lightly on colored papers before tearing. Use small scissors for metallic papers (for these, put glue on back). You can also cut small leaves with scissors. Finish with several overlays of sheer paper. Protect completed card with final layer of glue or plastic spray.

could be added and no part could be subtracted.

As one can see in the plan and in the photos, the living room is the most important space in this house. But within this space—containing as it does several family activities—is a place that is more important than any other. This place is the area where the family can gather—not to eat or to read but just to be together. It is emphasized by the strong mass of the fireplace on one side and by the greater height and brighter light of the garden room on the other side.

The materials of which this house was built—bricks and boards, concrete and glass—have been put together in a quite simple way. The roof rafters are balanced on four parallel wood beams. These beams rest, in turn, on either brick piers or wood walls. The rafters and the beams supporting them make up the two parallel, gable-ended roofs of the house. These roofs give shape to the two large spatial volumes of the house: the living areas used and shared by the family as a whole, and the more private bedroom and sitting-room areas used by the members of the family as individuals. These two large volumes join and become one at the garden room, the spatial spine or axis of the house. One enters along this axis near the carport. It is at this point that the spatial sequence, similar to a melody, begins. One is introduced to it: that is, one "hears" the first intimations of it when approaching the house.

As one enters the house he moves along this axis and through a sequence of spaces; the garden patio between the guest cabaña and the library is a part of this sequence of experiences. Finally he comes to the climactic point, the central part of the living area. Like the point of greatest importance in a melody (which is also the point of greatest intensity), the central area of the living room is the highest space, the area of brightest light, and the point, represented by the fireplace, of the greatest weight.

In relation to this important place, which contains and presents the dominant idea of the house, all other spaces have been subordinated. They have been handled in such a way that they support this main idea and do not weaken or detract from it. They contribute either reinforcement or variation. Their shape and size are determined to a large degree by the sire to strengthen and to give a sense of completeness to the main idea. All of the parts of the house, including details of construction, reflect and are characterized by this central and important idea. The rhythms, scales, and porportions of all of the rooms of the house are related to those of this dominant central space.

The rhythms of the house, whether sensed by vision or by actual movement within the space, are founded upon a pulselike unit of measure, a 2′-8″ module. Careful study of the photos and the plans show that all dimensions of the house are multiples or submultiples of this basic measure. It is in the relation of the length of the rooms to their width. It is in the baylike projections that are parts of the rooms. It is in the spacing of the supporting elements and in the spatial divisions of the doors and windows. As one moves along the promenadelike space of the garden room, the rafters—spaced upon the module—and the boards on the walls—spaced two to the module—give an added rhythm to one's sense of movement.

This unifying spatial measure permeates the whole fabric of the house just as the beat or pulse of a melody quickens and gives life to it. Similarly, the gable-ends and their handling mark its points of beginning and termination and give it a sense of completeness. Like a melody, this house has its point of beginning, its point of intensity, and its points of culmination and closure. And, like a melody, it speaks to its occupants, simply and directly. And, somehow, for its having done so, the quality of their life is heightened. ■

"Would you love this place! There isn't a taste mistake anywhere. Attention was paid to every last little detail—down to the theme cuff links on the French cuffs of the captains and waiters.

"Everything is beautifully and tightly integrated, in terms of motifs and colors and furnishings. Same outdoor furniture is used on the balconies and around the pool, also in the portico (which is very handsome). This integration has a stabilizing effect, so that as you move from place to place, you don't feel confused and distracted, a way you rarely feel in a big public building.

Jared Coffin House, 19th-century Nantucket mansion turned hotel, makes clients feel like guests in a home whose owner collects such treasures as Sheraton settees, antique oriental lacquer, and rugs.

"Even the art in the guest rooms is integrated into the color schemes it belongs with. How do you like that!

"It was done to order by a local artist, Mary Jane Mayer (very good, too), for four basic color schemes. She did about 820 pieces —fresh and charming in a half-collage, half-water-color technique in Japanese papers.

"The calming effect is also contributed to by the coloration of the building and décor. They faced realities about the glare and highlight intensity on the ocean front—particularly in tropical latitudes. The ceilings of balconies were painted the dark foliage green that is the theme color of the hotel. And the ceilings of rooms are a beigeish-ivory in a much-textured acoustical plaster, giving absolutely no light refraction.

"All sliding doors (which are also windows) are covered with sliding wood louvered doors finished in dark brown. Thus they are effective light controllers, while still letting the wind through. This is crucial in Hawaii, for much of the year here you are dead without the full breeze. But if you have the winds, you are quite comfortable without air conditioning. Blow-through conditions are therefore optimum. And think of being rid of the whipping sounds made by draperies, blinds and all those other alternatives to light control—to say nothing of their maintenance. So these louvered doors do the double job of controlling light and wind. (The hotel is air conditioned as well.)

"The lobby rooms are knock-out. Grandiose ceiling heights, adorned with marvelous big, big, big chandeliers by Irene McGowan, in collaboration with Roland Terry. She is undoubtedly the best lighting fixture designer in the U.S. and probably the whole world. And she has without doubt outdone herself here.

"Somebody did a super-extra wonderful job on the personnel, too. They are all the nicest types—young, well-mannered, polite without being obsequious. The room-service waiters are so elegant I feel I've snagged a Junior Manager from the Dorchester, Claridge's or the Savoy in London—you know, the impeccable type. Yet local boys.

"Architecture is basically Bauhaus, but there is a hopeful plan to erase the factory-like character of this. The entire structure is encased in a concrete trellis that in a year or so is supposed to become a vine-bearing box—a wrapping or coat of Bougainvillea.

"In a nutshell, the architects, Killingsworth, Brady, Smith & Associates, and designers, David T. Williams, Inc., and Roland Terry, have done a very good job and they have been exceptionally well guided and well edited.

"You must see it yourself one day."

This, as you may have guessed by now, refers to the recently inaugurated Kahala Hilton Hotel, which—in one woman's opinion, at any rate—has clearly outstripped its fellow Hiltons the world over in good design and local appropriateness. To put up here and test these accolades for yourself would stand you $24 a day with a mountain view, $32 with an ocean view for a double room, European plan.

Nantucket, on the far other side of the U.S.A., is also distinguished by some hotel news that may even be changing the seasons of this resort. In the mid-19th-century heyday of the whaling industry, this elm-shaded, dignified town of Greek revival elegance and magnificent joinery was headquarters for an affluent, quality-conscious society that chose its belongings from the choice goods of the seven seas.

For almost a century it has been better known as a summertime island, a resort where the perfume of sun-struck wild flowers vies in July with the brisk, iodized scent of the ocean, and climbing pink roses literally roam over the roofs of Sconset's weather-gray cottages.

Now it is a feasible delight to spend Thanksgiving, Christmas, or a winter vacation in Nantucket. In the quiet "real-life" time of year when the natives settle down to enjoy the dignity of their town and the beauty of their moors, you can be putting up in the Jared Coffin House. A whaling king's mansion turned hotel, it has been faithfully restored and furnished in the tasteful manner of its earliest days.

Every one of its original rooms, and this includes 13 guest rooms, is meticulously and individually furnished as it might have been in 1845. You may write letters home at an 18th-century Sheraton desk; your ashtray may be a Coalport saucer, your rug antique Chinese. Much of the art is heirloom, on loan from old Nantucket families. As an esthetic experience, staying here which from November 1 to April 30 would stand you from $14 to $22 a day, double, European plan—has been compared with vacationing in the American Wing of the Metropolitan, with the comforting addition of a private bath for every room. James Hendrix of William Pahlmann Associates was the designer. (He has also decorated Nantucket's new and contemporarily furnished summer hotel, The White Elephant.)

This happy restoration was done under the aegis of the Nantucket Historical Trust, which has several other such schemes under way, all for the purpose of safeguarding Nantucket's future by protecting its past. It has been successful, for instance, in establishing standards for remodeling or new building so that the character of the island won't be destroyed by architectural booboos or the kind of honky-tonk outrage that has frequently been the undoing of other resorts.

Also thanks to the Trust, Nantucket offers its visitors a new and unexpected shopping delight—a superlative collection of hand-woven fabrics for fashion or home furnishings. These are products of Nantucket Looms, a weaving group established by the Trust for the purpose of developing the industry of the island. Already its work-room-shop on Main Street has become a sort of magnetic meeting place for visitors and natives alike. Here you can order yardage from the most maddeningly delicious sampling of color and pattern we've seen since we visited the silk factories in Thailand. All the major fabrics and much of the carpet in the Jared Coffin House were woven here.

Up in Canada, in the year-round vacation country of the Laurentian mountains, the Chantecler Hotel in Ste. Adèle-en-haut offers a piquant paradox to winter vacationists. When the snow is on the ground, a dip in its glass-walled swimming pool in full view of the surrounding landscape gives you the sensation that you're splashing about in the middle of a snowfield. And conversely, to be outside looking in gives skiers something to write home about.

Double-room rates at this particularly well equipped hotel (they even have an indoor curling rink in its own building) start at $16, American plan.

The winter sports set, incidentally, are not the only devotees of the Laurentian area. It enjoys a continually increasing clientele of gourmets, for anyone capable of manipulating knife and fork soon becomes aware that this part of Canada lives up splendidly to its French culinary heritage, and takes it very seriously indeed. So seriously, that for the past seven years the Laurentian Resorts Association, of which the area's best hotels are members, has put on an annual Salon Dégustation, usually in September. This is one magnificent sampling of the dishes and wines offered by the region's chefs and sommeliers, and in variety, beauty of presentation, and—most important—taste, this food takes a back

It's not all fancy set pieces, galantines and moulds, either. One of our own "unexpected pleasures," remembered most enthusiastically, was an extemporaneous dinner at the Sun Valley Swiss Hotel, in Ste. Adèle—a fondue Bourguignonne followed by an incomparable version of crêpes suzette made on the spur of the moment by Max Siegmann, the boss himself.

Palm Springs, California, considered by many a place where the unexpected is par for the course, has one of the most spectacular of those climate paradoxes. In fifteen minutes' time you can change your ambience from sunny, dry desert and date palms to pine-forested, snowy mountain top, via the Palm Springs Aerial Tramway. This mechanical masterpiece takes you from the posh golf courses and swimming pools of Palm Springs (averaging a pool for every five inhabitants) to the peak of Mt. San Jacinto, some 10,000 feet nearer the sky, where you may well arrive in a swirling snowstorm. Skiing possibilities are imminent here. The view of the world is thrilling beyond belief, not only after you get there but during the entire cable-car ascent. And the glass-gabled restaurant-lodge on the mountain top unites wood, copper, and stone with the sophistication that marks the best of contemporary Californian design. Here is enchantment, especially in the evening, when the whole place seems suspended in a glamorous glow from the night-lighted outdoors. Time your trip up for just about sunset and return after dark and you'll experience the atmosphere at its best. Round trip is $3.95, an impressive bargain. Children, who adore this lofty excursion, go for $2.95.

For many years, we've considered the Guide Michelin the supreme, awesome, incontrovertible, and bother-some-to-read last word on where to stay, where to eat, and what to see in France and, latterly, Switzerland, Spain, and Italy. Returning summertime motorists now report their pleasant surprise that our own AAA's Motoring Abroad annual Travel Guide to Europe furnishes comparably dependable information on hotel accommodations in 26 different countries, presented in English, in easily legible form, minus those cabalistic symbols which some consider a language in themselves, and bolstered with equally legible country and city maps, and as much pertinent information on motoring abroad as any eager traveler could ask for.

A separate book, the AAA Guide to European Restaurants, fills travelers in on eating facilities in important towns in 19 countries, and from a brief look-through we'd say the recommendations are all worthy. Both books are published by the World Wide Travel Department of the American Automobile Association. Neither can be bought but are available to members of the Triple A.

Biggest surprise of the summer was to discover that there are now so many motels in Europe that there is an official European Motel Guide, published by Editions Emer, Paris. Information is given on motels in 15 countries in English, French, German, and Italian, which should alert you to the cosmopolitan nature of the travelers who are these days tooling around the world on their own wheels. Guide costs $2.95, available at the Golden Griffin, 611 Madison Ave., New York.

This being the time of year when lots of us make resolutions about brushing up on whatever language it was we took in high school, we feel justified in reporting on two guidebooks written in French so honestly, wittily, and informatively, that we'd urge anyone to take a Berlitz course if only to understand them. (Actually, plume-de-ma-tante French copes well with them.)

The books are the Guide Julliard de Paris and the Guide Julliard de l'Europe (this really a guide to Rome, Milan, Venice, Madrid, Barcelona, St. Sebastian, Lisbon, and Athens). Both are written by Henri Gault and Christian Millau, a team of Parisian journalists who are every bit as urbane as you'd expect them to be. The 623-page Paris guide purports to and does give you "the 2252 good (and bad) addresses which put Paris in your pocket," including evaluations of 338 restaurants and such behind-the-scenes information on shopping and services as where to bargain-hunt with the French ladies, how to hire a caterer, how to call up a guard of honor, how to judge caviar, ad infinitum. It's our bet that Parisians themselves are buying it like mad. Here it costs $7.95, from the Librairie Française, 700 Madison Avenue, New York.

The Guide de l'Europe, available at the same place at $8.95, reports in detail in 747 pages and with the same devastating sophistication and honesty on food, accommodation, sight-seeing, and shopping in eight cities. All in all, these are refreshing examples of guidebooks, clearly uninfluenced by friend, foe, or free lunch. They deserve very good translation.

After all the gnashing of teeth that has gone on over the $100 duty-free allowance, many American travelers have discovered that even if you have to pay duty, you can still be ahead of the game on many purchases made abroad. For a listing of duty rates and a straightforward discussion that breaks down some of the myths associated with U. S. Customs, equip yourself with a copy of Customs Guide for Travelers, by E. Grant Wing, a former customs inspector. Published by and available from T. S. Denison & Co., Minneapolis, it's $1.95. ■ have stimulated a session of soul-searching and self-incrimination. Next time the music may not be too loud.

Fast return on the dollar

Here the potential offender is a hi-fi system; TV and ordinary radio do not inspire this kind of mistreatment. The set is new and it may be in your own home or in one you are visiting.

The acquisition is not inexpensive, and in general, the more it costs the louder it will play. So it gets demonstrated to you (and to its operator) good and loud. This is quick justification for its having cost a lot of money. There must be no opportunity to reflect that this money could have been better spent on education, or travel, or old bills.

Again there is an automotive analogy. Suppose that, at a great financial sacrifice, you have gratified a long-suppressed ambition and bought a new sports car. There is nothing left in the budget to take it to the Salt Flats or Sebring or wherever sports cars want to gather. You are stuck with it in your own personal suburbia. What do you do about it? You make a nuisance of yourself to the full extent permitted by law. You warm up the noisy little engine in your driveway. You corner out of the driveway on two wheels to prove the claim that it will not tip over. You roar away from the first traffic light faster than anyone else. And then the second. And the third. This is fast proof of the wisdom of your considerable investment, and you get a lot of emotional satisfaction.

The demonstrator of the new hi-fi system has more for you than sheer and uniform loudness of the music. It happens that the most expensive elements in a hi-fi system are those that produce the extremes of range. Your operator knows, for instance, that he has spent an extra $200 for qualities or extra components that will deliver super-high frequencies —super in quantity as well as distance. So you get a demonstration of electronic shrillness that rings the ears of everyone in the room. Super bass is even more expensive —maybe $500 extra—and this demonstration will rattle the windows.

What do you do about this source of loud music? You do absolutely nothing, and it does not particularly annoy you because you realize its impermanence. The novelty will wear off, and when it does, one of two things will happen. If there grows out of this hobby-inspired beginning a genuine desire to listen to music, the music itself will demand respectful handling, and the reproducing system will no longer be subject to "demonstration" and other abuse. If, on the other hand, this is just another in a succession of hobbies, it will, like the previous ones, be put aside in favor of the next to come along. In either case, the problem of the too-loud music will be solved.

Romanticism

"Romantic" is the musicologist's classification for the music that came into being in the years between 1800 and 1900—give or take a decade on the near end. This period includes the entire output of Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Verdi, Wagner, Brahms, and Tchaikovsky, to name only the best-remembered of those who contributed to this golden age. From the point of view of today's programmers, recorders, broadcasters, and designers of home music systems, romantic music is marked (marred could be their word) by its excesses. The long pieces are too long, and in them the soft parts are too soft, loud parts too loud.

The length of a Tchaikovsky symphony may not create a problem in your plan of living and listening, but the remote relationship between his louds and softs will surely tax the best electronics equipment available for your use. If you turn up your volume to where the softest parts can be heard adequately, the loudest parts will almost surely filter through the walls to your neighbor. If you turn down your volume to keep your louds within social bounds, you sit and strain through softs that are completely silent.

This problem can be corrected at the source of the music, and sometimes is. If you are listening to the symphony "live" from AM radio, the softs are loudened and the louds are softened by the hand of the monitoring engineer. This permits the whole of the music (and the commercials) to be heard clearly in fringe areas. On the all-night classical programs, this job of compressing the extremes is frequently handled by an electronic device, though this kind of compressor has never been incorporated in commercially available home systems. If your source is FM radio, you usually get the full treatment, as FM prides itself on its fidelity to the original. If you are playing from your own disk or tape, you are at the mercy of only the conductor. He may respect the limitations of your reproducer, or he may be an exhibitionist at heart and even exaggerate this worst of romanticism's weaknesses.

What to do about this? Plan your programming of the romantic symphony for a time of day or night when it will cause the least fringe annoyance. Then turn up your volume to where the soft parts can be heard, and let the loud parts come as they may. Having taken all reasonable precautions, you may enjoy it—even be thrilled by it. The composer hoped that you would.

Just a few musicians

Most home music is made in a room of a size that can be dominated by a nine-by-twelve-foot rug. How many musicians do you invite to provide this entertainment?

In this game of make-believe, the symphony orchestra will embarrass you with its number of players as well as with its unpredictable bursts of output. You can adjust to the symphony, of course, just as you have managed to adjust to the watching of a dance spectacular on a 19-inch screen. Perhaps you are already adjusted to the idea of a symphony orchestra in your home.

There are votes to be cast, though, in favor of just a few musicians. A solo piano. A string quartet. A far-out jazz trio. A folk singer with guitar. This number of music makers in your small room is appropriate in every way.

There is also an electronic advantage to the small group. Compared with the enormous volume range of symphony or opera, the ultimate extremes of soft and loud from a small group are very close together. If your music is to be soft music, you can tune it in and go about your business of listening or not listening without further concern.

Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Munson

Your pair of ears will accept middles and highs and lows from your music system in reasonably uniform proportion, provided they come at you fairly loudly. As you turn down the ordinary volume control, trouble develops. You still hear the middles after the highs and lows have dropped completely under the level of audibility. This physiological phenomenon is the Fletcher-Munson effect, named for its discoverers.

In the early days of Hi Fi, before the availability of today's multi-knobbed masterpieces, nothing much could be done about this except to play everything loud for the sake of fidelity to the original.

If you are blessed with a contemporary hi-fi set (which will of course include stereo as the most recent important refinement), its knob complement will include separate controls for boosting respectively the highs and the lows. Respect these knobs and learn to use them! They are far more than just gadgets to be twisted by the gadget-minded. They offer an effective solution to your problem of the music that is too loud.

Try this. Select music to your liking, something that you would enjoy if it wasn't too loud. Start it. Turn the volume control down. Way down. Now turn the bass control way up. And the treble control way up. Yes, way up. You may dislike shrill music, but this is not going to be shrill. Finally, see if you can lower the volume control still more.

You have compensated for the uncorrectable shortcoming of your personal listening machinery. The result is soft music with no loss of quality or vitality or interest. This can be nice listening, the kind that will hold your continuing attention if you have the time to spend with it—or just background music to enjoy momentarily as you go by.

Some hi-fi sets have a knob identified misleadingly as a "loudness" control (not to be confused with the regular volume control which will also be present). "Softness" might be a better name, because the purpose of this knob is to combine into one the adjustment of the bass and treble controls for just this correction of your ability to hear uniformly at soft levels. Forget this loudness control if you happen to find one on the set. Its extremes are not as great as those of the independent bass and treble controls, and you may find that you will want all they can give you. Learn to use them regularly, sympathetically, and generously when you want soft music.

The cocktail party

Professionals and worldly amateurs, when running a cocktail party, frequently provide a background of continuous loud music. This accomplishes a number of purposes. It makes the first embarrassed arrivals feel that everybody is already having a good time. It guards against the horrid thought that the party might suddenly get quiet and dull. It provides an artificial security for the insecure hostess who does not feel up to the task of dominating the scene.

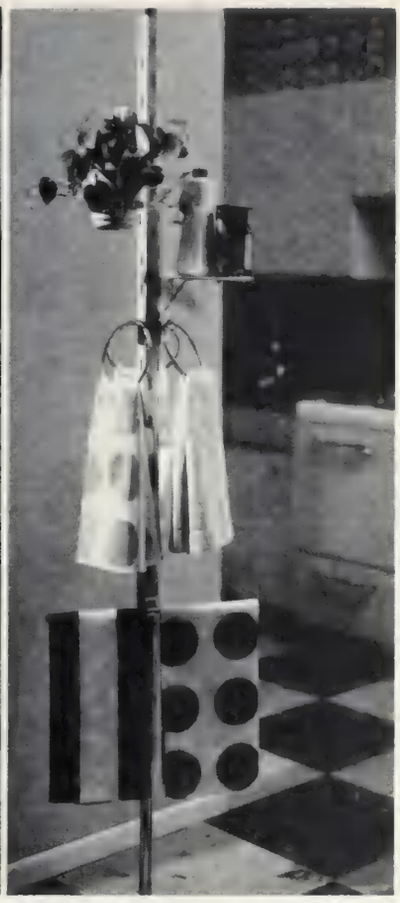
You don't like loud music? Try three fast Martinis, and forget your concern. The hour is reasonable, and the neighbors have undoubtedly been through this before.

Man versus machine

With the aid of electronics, it is possible and tempting to play shabby tricks on the art form known as music. Start, say, with the silvery tinkle of a zither or the breathy whisper of a flute. Pass this through a succession of tubes and enough speakers and you can end up with a volume of sound that will deafen the audience of a sports arena. Is this music? No, though it may have a part in the music of the future.

Assuming that music is still essentially an outpouring of the human soul, how do you curb the tendency or your home music system to violate this lovely tradition? In can, and, if unrestrained, it will. The abuse works in both directions.

Soft music is recognizable as soft by its uniqueness of quality as much as by its lowness of volume. You may not realize the importance of this quality of softness, but you are influenced by it. On your home system, music that is obviously soft at its live source should of course be played softly. Otherwise it is unnatural and unsatisfactory.



Loud music reproduces loud in quality as well as in volume. The quality of loudness includes the emotion and the physical strain that were necessarily present in the live performance. The quality of loudness also includes quite a bit of mechanical noise, the scrape of rosin on string, the rattle of reed, the shiver of brass. If this loud music is softened artificially with a volume control, the pure music seems to drop out of hearing more rapidly than the noise. The result is a dusty, unnatural imitation of loud music. Play your loud music as it should sound. A soft Merman, for instance, or Brunhild, or Woody Herman is just not credible.

Teen music is loud music. It always has been. Remember? If there are teens in your household, provide them with any kind of portable music maker—record player, TV, or radio. These small devices are incapable of the kind of bass that will penetrate walls. Now seal the youngsters off in some remote, well-insulated part of the house, and let them make loud music. This will help to keep them at home, and they are nice to have around for just as long as possible. ■

Slotted poles like these hold countless accessories, can be adjusted to fit any ceiling height from 7′ to 9′6″. Above, left, two poles are used to create a kitchen divider, with shelves for condiments and other items. At right, in addition to towel rings and bars, pole supports an 8″ round side shelf and a flower pot. These poles cost about $13 each. Most of the accessories range from $2 to $6. Chrome, brass, and painted finishes. The Brearley Co.

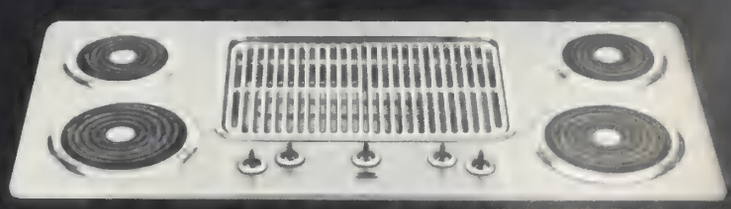
Pole systems are the answer to the wall of glass. In high-rise apartments with a wall of glass, many people are uneasy if it is not furnished. Some have the feeling they'll fall out of the building. To put a sofa against the glass defeats it, and the appearance from outside testifies that it is makeshift. With a pole system set against a glass wall, there is no such conflict between decoration and architecture. You can still see through, get the vista and the sense of distance. With the assembly set 6″ or so away from the glass, curtains can still travel behind it, and its finished back makes it look as right from the street as from indoors.

For architectural built-ins you need a designer, and if you skimp on construction the results may look jerry-built. Good pole systems are expertly designed, beautifully put together and finished. Their components are available in fine woods, such as walnut and rosewood. Cabinet panels may be of woven cane or softly lustrous plastic. No special tools or skill are needed for assembly and installation. If you have a screwdriver and can improvise a plumb line, you can do it yourself.

In selecting components, it is important to strike a good balance between shelves and solid pieces, such as bases, cabinets, and drawer sections. If you use too many shelves, the result is almost sure to look skeletal. And shelves have to be kept arranged. They can't hold an ill-assorted miscellany.

In some systems, there is no space left between solid components where they meet the pole. Each component butts flush against its neighbor, with no pole visible between them. In other types, you can custom-finish your installation with facing strips and side panels to conceal supporting poles, as shown on page 244.



Poles are available in brass, bronze, aluminum, wood, and in many colors. The poles may be of a tension-type, spring-loaded so that when set between floor and ceiling, the spring holds them firmly in place, but without marring surfaces. Others may have screw extenders to provide holding pressure.

Wasted corners can be utilized with a pole. It exploits space vertically, so needs very little floor area, as photograph, right, shows. Accessories may be inserted in slots at any height, any position. Having a pole to hang things on saves damaging wall. Poles in both photographs on page are "Peg Poles" by The Brearley Co.

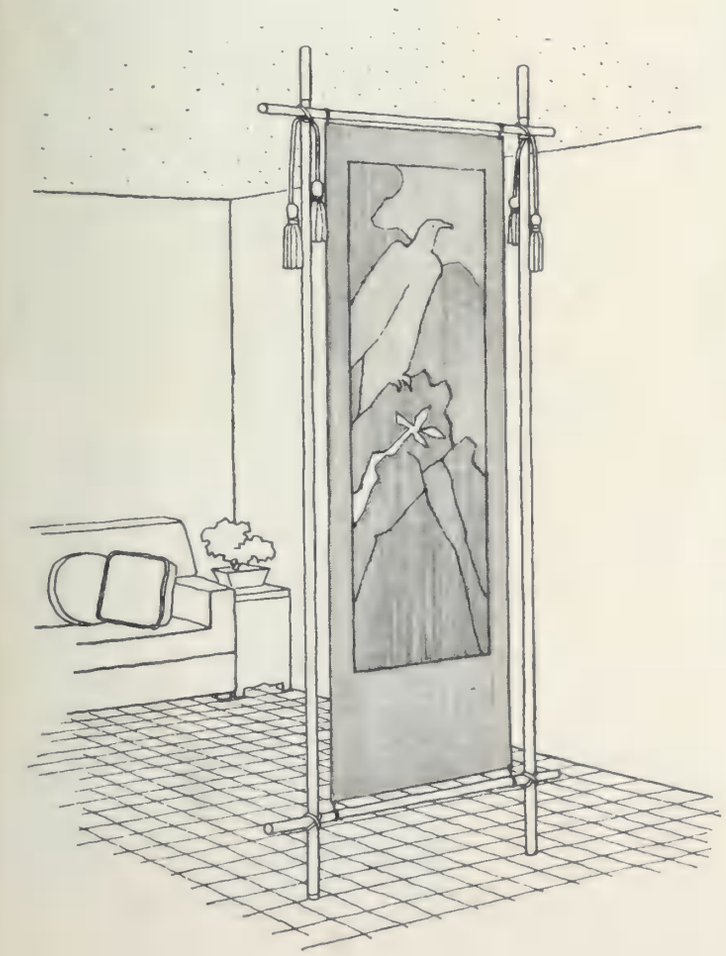
Poles don't have to extend from floor to ceiling. Some are supported on a pedestal base, and need no hold on the ceiling. Others stop short of the ceiling and are stabilized by an arm extending to the wall. This type usually requires an attaching device screwed into the wall. You can attach lamps on some poles anywhere along their length.

The advantages of pole support are not confined to fine furniture. Poles are useful in many minor ways. There are pole-supported bathroom units for adding storage at the end of lavatory, tub, or above the water closet. Pole-supported lamps, planters, mirrors, clothes-trees, dividers, even motion-picture screens, are available. Whenever there is need for support, a pole can provide it, and without requiring nailing into anything.

Pole-system furniture and other pole-supported items are available at furniture and department stores and through decorators.



Needs do change. Today you may need an assembly like this one for the nursery. But how about in a year or two? With poles, you have complete flexibility and adaptability, for they can be used for such a wide variety of things. In minutes a pole can be moved to a new location, converted to an entirely different role.

Utility storage shelves, made with poles you assemble yourself, can clean up that mess in the garage or basement. Supports for the shelves are nailed to the uprights. Poles hold in place by tension, don't have to be nailed down. For very heavy loads, substitute planking for the plywood.

For information about products seen in this story, see page 312.

Decorative divider made with poles can be useful where an entry opens directly into a living room. This drawing suggests how such a divider might be made using a Japanese scroll painting or kakemono. Many of the pole units showns in the photographs on the preceding pages could be improvised by using these spring-tension poles that you assemble yourself.

Tapestry by Boris Kroll illustrates how weaving can be raised to the fine-art level.

(specifying fiber, color, pattern, and some hieroglyphic-like terminology that only his mill people understood) and have a sample of it in his New York office in a couple of hours.

This is possible because he keeps six of his reproduction looms out of production, to be used for experimenting only. He estimates that more energy and money go into product development in his company than in any other textile mill in the world.

hese experimental looms also ve the short yardages (custom red to the customer's whim or ial technical requirements) are a godsend and a delight to professional decorators and de- ers. He argues that the fabric ustry should always have one two firms that can deliver, with- fuss and hysterics, short yard- s for special problems—at little ra cost.

All of this is contrary to the iciency-engineer point of view. u might say Kroll is anti-automa- n, even though the Jacquard m, the granddaddy of the think- g machine, is his chief tool and oduces the bulk of his output. In- nted in Lyon, France, in 1801 Joseph Marie Jacquard, the first odel was burned in the Lyon ublic square because it would put eavers out of work. By 1806, the rench government took it over, robably thinking to keep the mon- er under control. Later they al- wed M. Jacquard to receive royal- es on other looms built to his de- gn. The Jacquard loom operates a punch-card system, which tells e machine how to weave the pat- rn, permitting very high-speed rowing of the shuttles (up to 200 mes a minute). The machine still s to be tended by a weaver, who st watch judiciously so many hings at once that your head whirls. There are about 20 com- anies doing Jacquard weaving the U.S. for the fine decorative rade.

Mr. Kroll likes to say his plant nas been designed for creative auto- mation, and that unless such is possible we will all become robots.

Boris Kroll is what the financial press would call "a vertical opera- tion." He runs it—up, down, and diagonally. He does all the speci- fications pertaining to spinning, blending of fibers, staple lengths, twists, dyeing, etc. Only two other firms do this—Scalamandre and Schumacher—and they do not do it totally, for all fabrics. Mr. Kroll asserts that where the designing really starts is with the fiber—how it is spun, dyed, twisted, blended, etc. His factory keeps over 2,000 color formulas at the laboratories. Yet he also runs a mill with 275 employees and supervises mer- chandising, sales promotion, a field force, selling, seven showrooms in seven cities, etc.

He is truly a creative technolo- gist, yet fully aware of esthetic values. He delivers on the prophesy that Frank Lloyd Wright made that "someday we will know enough to master and exploit the modern tool box which the Indus- trial Revolution gave us 100 years ago." Boris Kroll believes that tech- nology is a design agent, as much as the brush or the pencil. He says 50 percent of his work is technol- ogy and 50 percent artistic sense. He likes to leave the business man- agement to others. The creating of new fabrics is his real métier.

There is no doubt he is a tech- nical virtuoso. But he is also an artist in the best sense of the word. Everything excites him. He views all work as opportunity to learn and to grow. A good example of this occured a few months ago. He heard HOUSE BEAUTIFUL was doing its 1965 Pace Setter House with Architect Alfred Browning Parker. He phoned beseechingly: "Would you give me the opportunity to de- sign all the fabrics for the house? You know I have never had the chance to design for a known situa- tion. My fabrics go into places I have never seen. You don't know how hard it is to design in a vacu- um!" (We do, for we know how hard it is to edit for readers we haven't met.)

The outcome: He is designing some 70 new fabrics for the 1965 Pace Setter, which you will see in situ in due course. But he went out of his way, suggesting things we had not asked for: hammock cloth of nylon sailcloth, "window sails" (wait till you see them!), tapestries for walls, and table run- ners.

This attitude is the true mark of a creative person—seeking the chance to do more and more work. Mr. Kroll would rather play cre- atively at fabric design than work his creativity off in other forms of play, as so many business people do. All his hobbies and interests revolve around fabric. He does not know where work and play start and stop, a very fortunate condi- tion which produces a happy life.

The fact that Kroll fabrics are much copied does not bother him very much. "There's so much more where that came from—why should I worry?" he asks drily. In his "library," which is the file of everything he has ever produced, are 75,000 samples. Maybe some patterns have 400 colorways or fiber variations on the same pat- tern. Not all of these have gone into the line, obviously, or the in- ventory would get too big. But he is not running thin on ideas.

Boris Kroll's chief optimism is about the future. He feels that the marriage of man-made fibers with natural fibers will result in the ultimate in fabrics. "They will have all the desirable qualities of hand and eye appeal, brillance of color, durability. For instance, silk has a failing (it tenders in the sun), but married to a Dacron warp, this failing is overcome, yet the lustrousness of silk is maintained."

Boris Kroll can think of himself in musical terms more easily than in any others. He says: "Scalamandre is a classicist doing authentic documentaries. He is a Brahms or a Beethoven. I am adventurous. I concentrate on new approaches to the use of the loom and new fibers. I am more like Hindemith, Ravel, Shostakovich, Bartok."

For a man who produced twelve miles of fabric for the Beverly Hilton Hotel in Los Angeles, this is a charming viewpoint.

Why is Boris Kroll the most copied designer in America? Because his designs are well-mannered and easy to live with. They don't shriek "look at me"—even though they can be brightly colored. They are not for people who want fads.

But above that, they have validity. They speak—speak with a quiet serenity. Some patterns derive out of stable values in many cultures—motifs and colorations that have endured for centuries. Yet they are not documentary reproductions of anything. Kroll has manipulated them, updated them, but in his own personal frame of reference. Since he feeds on everything, this is a mighty big frame.

He can almost describe what he does. "You've got to be born with an artistic conscience, which some call awareness and which most people have at birth. Then you have to develop technical virtuosity, which is experience at the highest level of your trade in your time. Then your artistic conscience takes over, and a work of art can develop —almost unconsciously."

He goes on: "Too many fabrics are created in tandem, by a factory technician and a stylist, neither of whom knows anything about the other's work. It succeeds if you want to create fads. But it won't produce designs that are lasting."

A few other textile companies in America have this kind of dynamic creativity. One is Jack Lenor Larsen, who works usually alone as owner-designer. And there are teams that get good things done for Martex, Galey and Lord, Skillmill, and Cabin Crafts, to name a few. But it seems to come through with less watering down when it is all the work of one man.

P.S. If you want to see Boris Kroll fabrics, you will find that any major store in any major city has samples of the complete collection, which they update twice a year as new things are introduced. Any store with a decorating department will have some samples. If you live in any of the cities where there are Kroll showrooms (New York, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas, Miami, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston), you can go there, provided you are introduced by a decorator with professional standing. ■

A more conventional style of sofa and chair is used here. This serves to balance the room, the other half of which appears on page 247, lower right. Two drawer cabinets are used for lamp tables and are deep and wide enough to provide near-at-hand storage for smoking and other accessories.

characteristics. The platform is basic. Other storage and seating pieces are arranged on this. Platforms vary in size from 30″x30″ to 30″x106″ and from 20″x60″ to 20″x106″, but all are uniformly 9″ high. Dark walnut is used on the base of the platform, while the top is finished in a lighter shade. This accentuates the elongated line of the group, as your eye tends to skim over this flat surface.

Great choice is given in the upholstered pieces. Bolsters, seating pads, mattresses, sofas, and a variety of chairs offer limitless arrangements. A back support in cane or wood, combined with bolsters and a mattress, forms a sofa unit, and the unusual amount of shapes and sizes makes it possible to satisfy individual problems. The back support is fastened to the back edge of the platform, assuring stability.

Sofas and easy chairs are available each with its own platform, which is so engineered that it joins other units accurately, forming one continuous line. Attached bases make good sense as they facilitate moving and rearranging.

Occasional chairs included

Small occasional chairs are part of the "Leisure Room" group. These, with cane or upholstered backs can be used on the floor or set on the platforms. The base of the chair drops slightly over the front of the platform and holds the chair securely. Best of all, they are stackable. Rectangular pads provide extra seating space.

Storage pieces consist of a two-drawer cabinet with attached base, a book unit, large square cabinet and magazine holders. The two-drawer unit can be used as a lamp table beside a chair or sofa and is available in two sizes—20″x30″ and 30″ square. Finished in a light-grained walnut, it is accented with small black drawer pulls. Only one case is available for books but it can be used in many ways. It is 4′ long and 12″ high. Used alone, it goes well beside a sofa. When several are used, they form a conventional bookcase.

A television cabinet has been included in this collection. The back is perforated for ventilation and one adjustable shelf holds the set. This cabinet could also be used as a storage piece.

What has been illustrated on these pages is a larger portion of this collection. Several varieties of occasional tables, sofas, benches and chairs are available but they are all based on the same principle. Thayer Coggin also has many small pull up chairs with legs, as shown above. These pieces will appeal to those who like the low, low look but prefer a bit of the conventional to be included.

"Leisure Room" designed by Milo Baughman, is a break from past design. Wherever it is used, it will always be the focal point within a room. ■

The Care and Feeding of Frying Pans

By DR. IRWIN ROSS

• Hemingway once said that Spanish is the only language perfect for purposes of swearing. Another observation on the subject of strong language is the one that refers to hell as having no fury like a woman scorned. Either one may be true. But they become mere pleasantries compared to the swearing a man can reel off in plain English when he discovers that someone—most likely a member of the opposite sex—has scoured his favorite frying pan.

It is strange that men and women alike should know so little about the souls of frying pans—and that is no effete statement. Frying pans are very tender instruments indeed: no matter whether they are made of steel, cast iron, heavy copper, or aluminum. Search your memory and recall the hapless moment when you grabbed a beautifully scoured pan shining in all its stainless steel glory and tried to rustle up a stock of pancakes. You know what happened. The first two or three or even four pancakes stuck to the pan and had to be scraped out with a spatula.

FRYING pans don't appreciate the harsh treatment of soap and water and scouring pad. Once broken in, they should only be wiped clean of grease with a paper towel but never scoured. Given such tender care they won't play you any tricks and will let your fried eggs, omelets, or pancakes slide out easily.

However, it is probably too much to expect the female of the species to leave a frying pan alone forever. There comes the moment when she feels the pan just has to be given a good scrubbing. An idiosyncrasy, no doubt, but we must be prepared for it.

A simple cure will rectify the aftereffects of soap and water. The same treatment should be also used on new frying pans fresh from the store. Place the new or freshly scoured pan over a very low flame. Melt in it from one to two teaspoons of bacon-drippings or vegetable shortening, depending on the size of the pan. Swoosh the fat around to coating the pan. When the fat is melted and well distributed, sprinkle the pan liberally all over its inner surface with plain cooking salt and remove the pan from the fire. Bunch two or three paper kitchen towels into a wad and carefully, exerting a little pressure, rub the inner surface of the pan with the fat-salt mixture. This needn't take long—two or three minutes are sufficient—as long as every bit of surface is treated in this way. With the same paper wad, brush all the salt and fat out of the pan into your waste fat container. Take a clean paper towel and wipe the pan dry. Now go ahead with your pancakes and not only will the first one slide out with the greatest of ease, but if you have the knack, it will take off beautifully as you flip the pan to turn the pancake over.

This treatment, of course, is only necessary for those pans for which a non-sticking surface is essential. There are others. When frying meat, for instance, it is unavoidable and rather desirable that certain albuminous and sugary particles from the meat stick to the pan. Unfortunately, they are often left in the pan and go down the drain in the washing. Such waste is truly unfortunate because it is these particles that are the best part of the gravy. After a piece of meat has been fried, the excess fat should be poured off—and saved—and a small amount of watery liquid should be added to the pan; this may be water but preferably it should be meat-stock or wine. Then the liquid is brought to the boiling point over a high flame, and while it boils, the particles that have stuck to the pan are loosened with a spatula. As they are soluble in water, they give a good color and proper flavor to the gravy.

BEFORE we get involved any further with frying anything, let's have a quick look at the various methods of frying. You can fry wrong or you can fry right. Frying wrong is to turn the flame high and burn hell out of everything in the pan—meat, fish, potatoes, plus fat. Result: a greasy bit of substance of the type we encounter too often in the local "greasy spoons." To fry right means to use a medium flame, to heat the fat to a nutty color, and then to place the meat or whatever-it-is in the pan. Leave it on one side for hardly a minute, turn it over, turn it over again, and again and keep on turning often until the job is finished. Frying, unfortunately, is a part of cookery that takes little time but needs constant attention.

Another form of frying is described commonly with the word "sauté." Plainly translated, although the dictionary may not honor it as being linguistically correct, the word sauté means "slow frying." Not only is it necessary to use a very low flame, but for the best sautéing a heavy pan made of cast iron, cast aluminum, or heavy copper is imperative. The heavy metal is necessary to disburse the heat evenly over the surface of the pan. This allows you to cook at the same temperature all over instead of having a hot spot in the center with a cooler ring around it.

THE obvious question to all these definitions is "What's the difference?" As an example, take an ordinary thin steel pan and fry a few rashers of bacon in it. It'll do the job fast—parts of the bacon will be blackened and others remain uncooked. Now try a heavy pan and a very low fire. Slowly the bacon cooks evenly and may be removed at any stage of "doneness" and then drained. Bacon fried slowly or sautéed in its own fat tastes better.

Yet there are more reasons for slow frying. Most meats—and particularly fish—dry out quickly, and strong heat applied to them leaves nothing but a mass of dry fibers. And for some meats, even the slow heat of sautéing is too strong. A good example is calf's liver. Before sautéing, with its slow heat, any fat first be rolled in flour to which salt and pepper have been added. When the liver slices hit the hot fat, this thin outer coating of flour protects the meat and prevents it from drying out and becoming leathery. Fish also, and particularly a fish filet, should have a protective coat such as bread or cracker crumbs.

Another important factor in frying and sautéing is the fat. While in sautéing, with its slow heat, any fat is permissible and usable, only certain fats should be used in frying. Butter and chicken fat for instance are fast-burning fats and are apt to turn black very quickly and thereby alter the taste of the whole dish. Lard is the ideal fat for frying. Bacon drippings are just as good if you like the slightly smoky flavor. Other fats that are very useful in their proper place are beef or veal kidney suet. Naturally, veal suet should be used for veal and beef suet for sautéing beef such as filet mignon or a steak.

Someone is bound to let out a cry of horror at the suggestion that a steak should be cooked in any other manner than broiling. Well, let's look at that. No doubt broiling is a very desirable form of cooking, particularly when it is done on a charcoal broiler. The heat is strong and intense, the cooking is done quickly, but the danger of drying out is great. Obviously only those cuts that are juicy and rich in "marble" should be broiled. "Marble" is a trade term and refers to the very fine, thin veins of fat with which all good beef and lamb are intergrown. If you plan to broil a steak or chop, look the meat over carefully. Just because it looks good and red and juicy doesn't mean much. Unless there of plenty of those little white veins going through the meat, better not broil it. Sauté it.

If, however, the beef that the butcher sold you as a "prime steak" shows not even the slightest suspicion of a single little fat vein, better deliver it to the fine fate it deserves—make it into hamburgers.

FOR a good hamburger, grind up a tablespoon of clear beef suet with every pound of meat. After the meat is ground, place it on a board and flatten it out with the tips of the fingers. Then to each pound of meat add 2 tablespoons of heavy sweet cream or 3 tablespoons light cream. Sprinkle over the meat as much salt and freshly ground black pepper as desired. Then with the tips of the fingers work cream, salt, and pepper into the meat until the meat has absorbed all the cream. Shape the meat into balls and drop them sharply back on the board. As they hit they will flatten out slightly—which is enough—but do not press the hamburgers with a spatula into flat cakes. Let them stand for about half an hour and then either sauté them in very little butter, butter and lard mixed, or brush them generously with salad oil and grill them under the broiler. Cooking time, of course, depends on the size of the hamburgers and how well done or how rare you want. During sautéing, or broiling, turn the hamburgers frequently by using two spoons to turn them. Never stick a fork into them as they will start to bleed immediately, and never, never, never, squash them with a spatula during cooking as is done in hamburger emporiums.

To sum it all up, I say that if you're going to cook, do it right. ■ delicate, and has a refreshing acidity. It should be drunk young. The wine takes its name from the grape. There are two main areas: Sèvres et Maine on the left bank near Nantes, and Coteaux de la Loire further upstream on the right bank. The latter are said to be the better, but local tasting will tell.

Then comes Anjou, best known for its light rosé wines—in my opinion overrated even among rosés—but in fact the white wines are much better. Not far from Angers is Savennières, which makes a distinguished dry white wine, rather in the style of a white Burgundy. On the other bank is the Coteaux du Layon, where the wines are much fuller and sweeter, and whence comes one of the great sweet wines of France, Quarts de Chaumes. It lasts well and recalls the lusciousness of Sauternes and the lively grapiness of a Rhine wine. Beyond, upstream and near Tours, comes Vouvray, tending to sweetness and often with a slight sparkle. Although it is much better known than the similar Montlouis on the opposite bank, some maintain that the latter is the better.

Farther upstream are my favorite Loire wines, Pouilly Fumé and Sancerre. They are likely to be the first wine districts met by those driving from Paris on RN 7 and meeting the Loire on its great bend at Briare. Pouilly Fumé takes its name from the blanc fumé grape (whereas Fuissé of the other Pouilly is a village), and lesser wines of the district made from the Chasselas grape may only be called Pouilly-sur-Loire: there is a big difference in quality. Sancerre is fuller and less distinguished, and both are preferable when bottled on the spot, as they usually suffer in cask on the voyage. Sancerre has a honeyish nose. Associated with it are the wines of Quincy and Reuilly, grown on the Cher river near Bourges. They are drier. The last wine that may be called a Loire wine is St. Pourçain-sur-Sioule on the Allier. There is an attractive light dry wine and a rosé as well.

The next most important wine river in France is the Rhone, with its tributary the Saône, which accompanies the vineyards until Lyon. These adjoin RN 6. The two most northerly are the Châlonnais and the Mâconnais. The former are rather overshadowed by the neighbouring Côte de Beaune wines, but they are well worth drinking. The best red is Mercurey, rather light in color and with an attractive ing whites are Montagny and Rully. Pouilly-Fuissé and its area produces the best white Mâcon. Le Clos at Fuissé and Château de Pouilly are among the leading growths. The next best Mâcon commune is Viré.

This is very agreeable country, merging into the hilly Beaujolais district. Beaujolais itself is not hard to find. Even on the crowded, noisy RN 6 there are bars and, as may be guessed, moulins-à-vent.

But do not look for either a vineyard or a commune called Moulin-à-Vent, for it is a small area carved out of the villages of Chénas and Romanèche-Thorins, and generally acknowledged to contain some of the best vineyards in Beaujolais. But it is primus inter pares, and there are vineyards in Fleurie claiming equality. There is no village of Brouilly, either. It is a hill, and the appellation applies to wines grown in four or five villages. Morgon comes from Villié-Morgon. The best vineyards lie in the hills to the west of RN 6, but the leading merchants have their establishments in Belleville, Villefranche, and Pontanevaux.

Around Lyon, there is a break in the vineyards and then they resume by the Rhone and the RN 7, the main road to the Côte d'Azur. South of Lyon, they run down to Avignon, six to twelve miles wide on either bank, with a break near Montélimar, the nougat capital. The red wines are the better known, from Côte Rotie in the north, Hermitage in the middle, and Châteauneuf-du-Pape in the south. The common grape is the Syrah, and it produces deeply colored wines—robust, fruity, and with a powerful bouquet. Unfortunately they are often drunk too young. I think it not unfair to suggest that the Rhone red wines are halfway on the road to Italy. The Côte Rôtie wines are the more delicate. Hermitage wines once had a great reputation in Brittain for longevity, but now they seldom get the chance.

Do not search for a wine village called St. Joseph, for in fact the name is given to the produce of several villages opposite Tain l'Hermitage. Downstream is Cornas, with fruity wines, and St.-Péray, which specializes in sparkling wine. From near Avignon comes Tavel, the most famous rosé of France.

There are some famous Rhone white wines: White Hermitage, and in the north of the area, near Vienne, Condrieu, and Château-Grillet. The latter is one of the most famous wines of France, and said to be the only vineyard with its own appellation controlée. ■ procedures are followed. In any case, such a going-over is a good start for an exercising holiday.

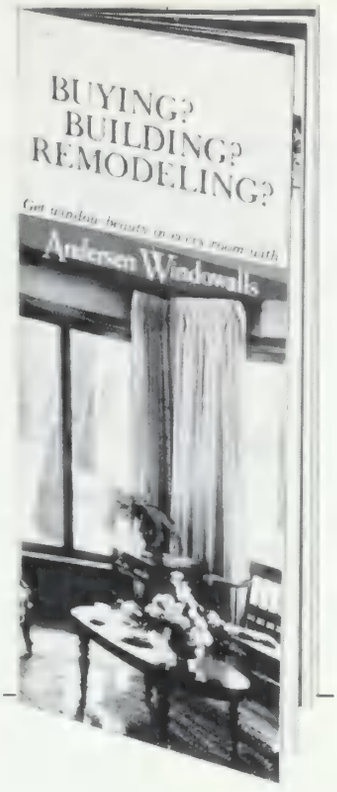
The waters of natural spas contain salts of such minerals as iron, calcium, sodium and sulphur, and often gases. These components plus the warmth or carbonation of the waters are frequently claimed to be therapeutic. In Europe particularly, spa treatment calls for immersion or ingestion of them as alleviants to certain illnesses. Americans tend to regard claims for curative powers with a pinch of sodium chloride. Europeans, however, are likely to espouse with serious and heated partisanship the liver-healing virtures of Vichy's springs, say, as opposed to those at Montecatini, or take sides for Baden Baden versus Badgastein as a cure for rheumatism. But people do feel better during and after spa treatments.

The traditional length of a spa course is 21 days, followed by another week's rest. And there are those who say that this is pure mystique, since people have been attributing supernatural powers to mineral springs since the dawn of time and associated all sorts of numerological hocus pocus with them. But think of a three weeks' pampering course of buoyant baths, carbonated baths, hot packs, needle sprays, Scotch douches, and massages—wouldn't you expect euphoric results?



In Europe the most glittering casinos, concert halls and parks are associated with spas. In this country, the Greenbrier at White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, and The Homestead, in Hot Springs, Virginia, maintain world-famous golf courses besides all manner of sportive facilities such as swimming pools, bridle paths, skeet, and bowling. At Saratoga Springs, New York, besides a championship golf course, there is horse-racing from spring to October, with the August flat-track races classics of their kind. And by 1966 the now-building Performing Arts Center will add ballet, opera, symphony and theater to the list of after-bath divertisements.

There are almost as many different kinds of spa procedure as there are spas themselves. According to some physicians, 20 to 30 percent of any spa method is palliative—"so it" rather a placebo than a remedy.

For the most part, all American doctors, particularly those attached to spas, lean over backwards to disclaim any specific cures. What they may say, however, is that certain warm spa waters permit such patients as arthritics to "suffer in comfort," simply because heat is soothing to certain types of disease.

Certainly you'll have no trouble tracking down a spa at which to vacation. The whole world fairly Doesn't it make sense to spend $9.95 for a Salton Hotray that you'll use only 995 times a year. Every year.

You'll use Hotray® to keep coffee warm in the morning. To keep toast hot in the morning. To keep cereal hot in the morning while waiting for everybody to get up.

You'll use it to keep coffee warm during the coffee klatch. You'll use it to keep baby food warm one, two, three, goodness knows how many times a day.

You'll use your Hotray to keep hors d'oeuvres warm during the bridge club or PTA or den mother's meeting. And if your husband can't sit down to dinner with you and the kids you'll use it to keep his dinner hot until he comes home. It's a conservative estimate that you'll use your Salton Hotray only 995 times a year.

If you can use our $9.95 Hotray 995 times a year, guess how often you can use our $19.95 Hotray?

bubbles with them. Medical Hydrology, edited by Henry Licht, lists 1,379 major mineral-water spas in 55 countries, some of which, like India and Ethiopia, may come as a surprise and then turn out to have been spa-conscious for a couple of thousand years.

But almost as great a surprise is the fact that wherever you live in the U.S.A., there's probably a mineral spring near you, with every likelihood of being or eventually becoming a spa. (North Dakota is reputedly the only spa-less state.) What is more, this country can boast five especially great spas which attracted rather brilliant society in the last century and now bid fare to come back into a new heyday.

Saratoga Springs, New York, once the summering spa of Diamond Jim Brady, Lillian Russell, and their extravagant ilk, today lets anyone tailor a spa vacation to his pocketbook, staying at boarding houses, small-town hotels, or living in luxury at the Gideon Putnam.

You go to any of three handsome bathhouses to bathe in the carbonated water, from $2 up, depending upon the privacy you demand for your soak, your massage, and whatever other pampering you desire. The Roosevelt Bath is the fanciest. The spa is state-controlled. Its three mineral waters—Geyser, Coesa and Hathorn (the last two are laxative)—are drunk. They are also bottled and exported.

Use of the waters in Hot Springs National Park, Arkansas, is regulated by the U.S. Government. The baths are given in the eight bathing establishments on the broad, magnolia-shaded promenade called Bath House Row, and in four hotels—the Arlington, De Soto, Majestic, and Moody—which have thermal departments. This is National Park area with Ouachita National Forest nearby, golf courses, a February race meet, and plenty to divert you. You must do your own dieting.

You can take a spa vacation at French Lick, Indiana, headquartering in the French Lick Sheraton Hotel, a luxurious expansion of the grand original 19th-century hotel. The usual relaxing "works"—mineral baths, massage, et al—go on under its roof. The rest of the time you're out on its bridle paths, golf course, skeet range, or garden, or disporting with other jazz buffs at its annual August Music Festival.

The Homestead in Hot Springs, Va., traces its origin to 1751, believes itself the oldest resort hotel in the U.S., and certainly holds a record for devoted families who return year after year. Medically supervised mineral baths, packs, massages, and Zander-equipped gymnasium, plus three golf courses, tennis, bowls, skeet, and riding can put you in trim, and the dining room will cooperate with you if you insist.

The Greenbrier, White Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, known to its consistent fans as the "Old White," offers so much recreational goings-on, from championship golf to art or embroidery lessons, it almost forgets it has those mineral springs that helped a certain Mrs. Anderson's rheumatism in 1778 and made it the 19th-century center of Southern society. But everything about it, including the luxury of its accommodations, spells spa vacation. A magnificently equipped diagnostic clinic offers a three-day test program, which averages about $150.

The newer Safety Harbor Spa, Safety Harbor, Fla., provides a bona fide weight reduction and pepper-up vacation, featuring the waters of Springs found by De Soto, whirlpool baths, massage, yoga, gymnastics, swimming and golf—and a no-fooling low-calorie diet. A complete physical examination by resident doctors is included.

Another new and attractive place to pamper yourself with mineral waters, baths, massage, saunas, inhalations and the outdoor life—long on golf and horseback excursions into the desert hills—is the Palm Springs Spa Hotel, Palm Springs, Calif. Hot springs, discovered and still owned by an Indian tribe, have been diverted into an outside swimming pool. You must watch your own diet here.

Taking Badgastein in Austria as a gauge, here's the kind of thing you may expect if you take your pep-up treatment in a European town's 160 hotels, take your baths and drink the waters at the municipally owned thermal establishments. Depending upon what ministrations the spa offers, you may experience such things as hot mud packs, vapor or steam baths, underwater therapy, and saunas in the municipally owned place or in privately owned institutions. Your own hotel will probably be staffed with masseurs, and hotel chefs in European spas have at long last been prevailed upon to produce the high-protein, low-fat diets most dieters need. Badgastein offers a curious radon cave—radioactive and rare—which you may enter only with a physician's OK. Extra diversions, besides concerts and gaming at the casino, include Alpine walks in winter, skiing in summer. An aristocratic, rococo, elegant hotel can be a bargain—as it is here for as little as an all-inclusive $90 a week. Medical fees may be about $60. Baths, $1; massages, $2. So for a 21-day "cure" you can pay less than $500 and feel like a million.

HEIRLOOM STERLING BY Oneida SILVERSMITHS

How would you like $250 worth of fabulous cooking lessons from Dione Lucas— for only $8.50

Just like having her at your side in her gourmet cooking school!

Says Dione Lucas: "You must put everything you have into good cooking—brawn as well as brain and flair. That's what makes it so satisfying—you are using all of yourself. It's the women with can openers and frozen dinners who feel wasted."

DIONE LUCAS' cooking school is one of the special places of New York. Women (and a surprising number of men) come from near and far to learn her classic recipes, which she teaches in her own unique, foolproof way. But if you, like so many women with the urge to create truly great meals, do not have the time or the money to join these classes, here's wonderful news: Dione Lucas has translated her famous lessons into a magnificent book. Now, with THE GOURMET COOKING SCHOOL COOKBOOK you can get the same Cordon Bleu recipes, the same famous time-saving devices, the same clear-cut, no-mistake-possible instructions, for only $8.50!

With this book before you, it's like having Dione Lucas herself in your kitchen, at your shoulder, guiding you step-by-step in the creation of dishes that are conversation pieces — that will amaze your husband, astonish your guests, and establish your reputation as hostess par excellence.

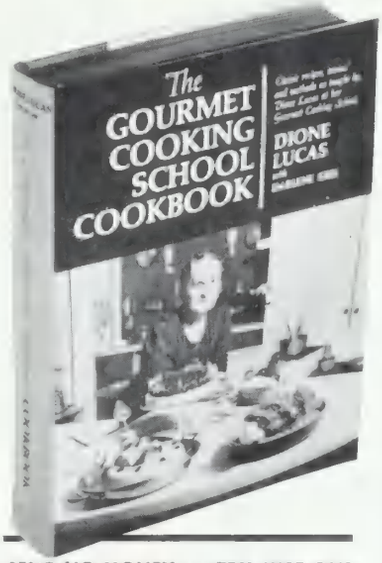
Different from any other cookbook

THE GOURMET COOKING SCHOOL COOKBOOK is organized differently from conventional cookbooks. Not only is it arranged by complete meals, but the entire menu for dozens of superb dinners is given, complete with marketing lists, suggested wines, and directions for preparing many things the day before, or the morning of the meal, without detracting from the excellence of the dishes.

Among the many noteworthy techniques that Dione Lucas reveals to you is her "preparation tray," which you may remember seeing her use on her TV program. With it she shows you how to take care of such chores as chopping, grating, blanching, scraping and measuring before you launch into the actual cooking. And you save hours and hours of preparation time.

Most important of all is the fact that this is not a conventional cookbook but a how-to-cook book. Nothing remotely approaching these gourmet cooking lessons has ever been offered in book form.

Her own special recipes



The recipes in THE GOURMET COOKING SCHOOL COOKBOOK are Dione Lucas' own – the result of thirty years of experience and experimentation to arrive at the most delectable mousse, the lightest soufflé, the best boeuf bourguignon, the zestiest paella, the most exquisite crêpes and, of course, her priceless chocolate roll. They are the dishes asked for again and again by her students – the ones they are most eager to learn and master.

The first gourmet cookbook that won't frighten you half to death

Mrs. Lucas' instructions are completely clear, exactly as she teaches in class. She doesn't assume anything – and thus her recipes are disaster-proof. Says she: "One day I found one of my students blithely paddling a rubber scraper around in a hot Mornay sauce. From her I learned that it was necessary to come right out and say, 'Use a wire whisk or a wooden spatula and scrape the bottom of the pan each time you stir.'" And that's the kind of advice you'll find throughout THE GOURMET COOKING SCHOOL COOKBOOK—advice that's clear, down to earth, and to the point.

NOTE TO LUCAS STUDENTS: This book will give you all the wisdom of the course in attractive, permanent book form. Much better than your hastily scribbled notes, it can bring back to you all the tips, tricks and techniques you may have forgotten.

SPECIAL SECTION: A special section on "The Complete Kitchen" tells you exactly what cooking and serving utensils you will need plus a catalog of herbs, spices, oils, wines that all French cooking relies on. Beautifully illustrated, too, by John Alcorn.

SEND NO MONEY . . . TRY JUST ONE RECIPE. Fill out and mail the coupon below to Bernard Geis Associates, Dept. GHB, 128 East 56th Street, New York 10022. Send no money. If, after examining THE GOURMET COOKING SCHOOL COOKBOOK at home and testing some of its recipes, you are not convinced that it can guide you to greater meals, easier than any other cookbook you own, simply return the book and owe nothing. Otherwise, you will be billed just $8.50 plus postage.

ABOUT DIONE LUCAS A diplomate of the famed Ecole du Cordon Bleu in Paris, with nearly 30 years' experience as a teacher, Dione Lucas is unquestionably one of America's most respected gourmet cooks. Her Gourmet Cooking School pupils have included Mrs. Richard Rodgers, Joan Fontaine, Olivia de Havilland and Boris Karloff, and she has won thousands of women over to the delights of fine cooking with her television course. She is now the chef de cuisine of the Ginger Man restaurant in New York, as well as director of her cooking school.

How To Make Our Cover Angel

Decide height you wish finished angel, and proportion head and arm wires accordingly. Body should be about seven times the height of the head.

• Start out by making a small angel first to get the feel of your material; then you can go on to make larger or smaller ones and to change and embellish as you wish. Before you start, assemble all your material. You will need:

1. A styrofoam egg or ball (the ball can be pared with a knife to an egg shape for the head).
2. Wire for armature (#16 copper wire, at hardware stores).
3. Posterboard or cardboard for base cone of body.
4. Masking tape 1″ wide.
5. Wallpaper paste. One pound will make 6 medium-size angels.
6. Sheeting or cotton fabric. Cotton absorbs paste well and drapes easily.
7. Lace for trimming, if wanted.
8. String, cord, or heavy yarn for hair and belts.
9. Gold spray paint.
10. Paper toweling and wax paper.
11. Large bowl for paste, scissors, pliers, wire cutter.

Cut a quarter circle of posterboard to the size you wish the body of the angel; roll it into a cone so that the point is as tight as possible and circumference at bottom is size you wish dress skirt to be. Fasten with masking tape at right angles across seam and over seam both inside and out.

Bend wire with pliers into shape shown for armature (below), twisting center up double to make neck. Form shoulders, arms, and hands, and twist wire back at wrists. Attach armature at top of cone by making slit across top and insert-

(Please turn to page 32)

Collect all the materials you will need in one place, as this will simplify working. Bend the wire for armature, cut fabric strips for sleeves and piece for robe, and form cone for body before mixing the wallpaper paste.

If you knew what the experts know about carpeting...you'd always look for All Wool.

1 A hostess knows that wool rises to every occasion. Crowds cutting capers on the carpet? Wool springs back at every step. Nature put resilience in wool. Years of cha cha cha won't take it out.

2 A mother knows that wool holds down noise. Wool naturally absorbs sound. When pint-sized soldiers start a shouting war, wool keeps peace and quiet in the house.

3 A decorator knows you can find exactly the color you want in wool. Brilliant hues, earth tones, muted or vibrant color—whether it's in the rainbow or not, you'll find it in wool.

4 A homemaker knows you can count on wool to wear and wear and wear. Wool naturally resists abrasion, stays fresh and new-looking longer. Adds up to a wise investment.

5 A cleaning expert knows that wool resists soil, is a breeze to clean. Litter bugs at work? No matter. Dirt lifts out in a twinkling.

look for All Wool.

The words ALL WOOL assure you of all the good benefits of fine carpeting. Not just one or two. That's why you'll find ALL WOOL on the best carpeting in the world... like Stephen-Leedom...one of wool's great quality brands. Shown: Stephen-Leedom's Majestic in Blue. About $14.95 sq. yd.

ing shoulders. Fasten securely in place with masking tape. Set cone on wax paper and a piece of heavy cardboard so it can be moved if necessary. Mix paste as directed on package (approximately one cup of paste to seven cups of water). This will keep several days if covered and refrigerated. Wrap styrofoam head with ½"-wide strips of paper toweling soaked in paste and then smoothed on. Put aside to dry. Wind hands with more paste-soaked strips and continue up arms about 1".

Soak sleeve strips of cloth in paste and squeeze out. (For a 12" angel each strip should be about 3" wide and 24" long.) Turn under edge for hem and starting at wrist: wind strip loosely around arm wire and end it with a flap over the shoulder (see photo #1).

Cut small hole in center of robe fabric (cut fabric piece for robe twice the height of cone plus 4" for extra skirt length; width should be ½ the length). Soak in paste, squeeze out and put hole over neck wire. Drape front panel, letting side edges go back well over the middle line of cone. Press edges firmly to cone so they will stick and fold under skirt edges for hem at bottom. Drape back panel down to overlap front (see photo #2). If you wish a waistline, wrap cord over front panel and tie under back panel. The paste stays wet for some time, so you can try different ways of draping the robe. Use a pencil to push the folds into place. Soak lace trim in paste and apply.

Put head on neck wire by pushing small end of "egg" over twisted wire, then soak cord or thin strips of twisted paper toweling in paste to make the hair. Arrange hair strips on head (see photo #3).

When angel is completely dry (allow several days), spray with gold paint. Make a "spray box" from an open carton and put angel inside so that spray is controlled.

If you wish to add wings, cut them from posterboard (see diagram below) and after shaping, apply thin strips of paste-soaked paper toweling or cord for feathers. First do one side and let dry, then turn over and do the other side. If wings warp in drying, they can be bent into shape after they dry. Attach wings to center of back shoulder with two pins or glue. ■

If you want to give your angel wings

To make wings, fold posterboard double, and cut outline shape as shown. Cut on line indicated at inside center and overlap the two sides to shape a curve. Fasten with masking tape or staple. Wings should be sized according to width and height of finished angel. Width should be about three times width of shoulders and length about two-thirds total height of figure.

A Classic Duck Dinner With a Memorable Climax

Recipes for Magnificent Menu #1 by Dione Lucas.
Introduction on page 157.

Editor's note: Heading each recipe is a marketing list that does not include ordinary household staples.

Crème Olga
(Scallion and Raw Mushroom Soup)
Serves 6

5 bunches of scallions (green onions)
¾ pound of firm but not hard white mushrooms sweet butter
5 cups of light chicken stock light cream
heavy cream
white peppercorns
cayenne
flour

Put in a mixing bowl 8 tablespoons (4 ounces—1 stick) of sweet butter.

1. Beat with a wooden spatula until it is very light and fluffy.
2. Add 5 bunches of scallions, carefully washed, dried, and very finely chopped. (Use the green stalks as well as the white tips.)
3. Mix thoroughly and put into a heavy pan.
4. Add 1 teaspoon of salt, ½ teaspoon of freshly ground white pepper (taste for seasoning, and correct if necessary).
5. Cover the pan and cook very slowly for 10 minutes, being careful not to let the scallions brown. You just want to stew them in the butter.
6. Take the pan off the fire and stir in 2 tablespoons of flour.
7. When the mixture is smooth (still off the fire) add 5 cups of light chicken stock.
8. Stir over the fire until the soup boils.
9. Let it simmer for 10 minutes, uncovered.
10. Wash and dry well ½ pound of firm (but not hard) white mushrooms.
11. Slice them very thin, stems and all, and add them to the soup off the fire.
12. Rub the soup through a strainer at once or run it through a food mill. (You don't want the mushrooms to cook a lot.)
13. Add to the strained soup 2 cups of light cream.
14. Reheat the soup, and when it is hot add ¼ pound of very finely sliced raw mushrooms.
15. Serve at once in individual bowls topped with 1 tablespoon of plain whipped cream seasoned with a bit of salt and a sprinkle of cayenne.

Caneton à l'Orange
(Roast Duckling with Orange)
Serves 6

2 four- or five-pound ducklings
4 chicken livers
6 oranges garlic
black peppercorns
salt butter
dry sherry dry white wine red wine brandy orange marmalade bitter orange marmalade tomato paste meat glaze potato flour chicken stock
red currant jelly

Remove the innards, wash and dry thoroughly 2 ducklings.

1. In the cavity of each put 1 orange cut in quarters, a little garlic, 2 bruised cloves of garlic (crush them slightly with a fork to release their juices), a few peppercorns, and a small lump of butter.
2. Truss the ducklings carefully.
3. Place them on a rack in a shallow roasting pan with ½ cup of good dry white wine.
4. Roast them uncovered in a preheated 375° oven for 1 hour and 50 minutes. (This is for duckling the French manner, with the inside running a pale pink. You may prefer to cook yours 30 minutes longer.)
5. Baste the ducks every 20 minutes. Tip the pan back and to slosh the juices around, then baste. Each time, add a little wine and water to the pan to keep at the same level (about ¼ inch of liquid).

6. Brush the ducks with a little melted butter after each basting.

7. After 40 minutes, turn the ducks over on their breasts. (Lift them with wooden spoons. Do not pierce their skin!) After 20 minutes turn the ducks on their backs again.

8. Ten minutes before the ducks are ready to come out of the oven, spread the breasts lightly with orange marmalade. This will give them a beautiful glaze.

9. Remove the ducks to a warm platter and let them stand about 5 minutes before carving.

10. Carve them carefully and arrange the pieces neatly on a hot flat serving dish.

Pour over the ducks the following orange sauce:

1. In a sauté pan, heat 4 teaspoons of salt butter.

2. Add the duck livers and 4 chicken livers.

3. When they are brown on both sides, heat in a small pan 6 tablespoons of brandy.

4. Ignite the brandy and pour it over the livers.

5. Remove the livers and stir the pan juices well.

6. Add to the pan 4 tablespoons of butter (2 ounces—½ stick) and the finely shredded rind of 3-4 oranges. (Peel the bright orange rind with a swivel-bladed potato peeler, being careful not to get any of the bitter white skin. Cut the strips of peel lengthwise into thin shreds, using a sharp chef's knife. Save the oranges to use for the final addition to the sauce.) Add 4 teaspoons finely chopped fresh garlic.

7. Cook very slowly, without browning, for 2 or 3 minutes.

8. Stir in, off the fire, 2 level teaspoons of tomato paste, 2 level teaspoons of meat glaze, 1 good teaspoons of potato flour.

9. When this is smooth, mix in, still off the fire, 2 cups of good chicken stock, ½ cup of dry sherry, ½ cup of good red wine, ½ cup of orange juice, ½ cup of orange marmalade, 3 tablespoons of bitter marmalade, 2 teaspoons of red currant jelly, 1 teaspoon of freshly cracked black pepper.

10. Stir over the fire until the sauce comes to a boil.

11. Put back the livers and allow the sauce to simmer for 15 minutes. (If you have made your sauce a few hours in advance, you can remove it from the fire, give it an airtight cover of transparent wrap, and let it stand until you are ready to use it.)

12. Just before serving, remove the livers, slice them, and return them to sauce. Add skinned sections of 3 or 4 navel oranges. (Use the oranges that you peeled earlier. Be sure you remove every trace of the white skin from the sections.)

13. Carefully pour this sauce over the carved ducks, and serve. A hot oval silver serving platter is excellent, and you may garnish it by putting the following orange potatoes around the ducks.

Pommes de Terre à l'Orange
(Orange Potatoes)
Serves 6

6-8 Idaho potatoes cloves
sweet butter
eggs
4 oranges

1. Peel and cross-halve 6 large Idaho potatoes (8 if they are small).

2. Put them in a saucepan, cover them with cold water, and bring it to a boil.

3. Add 2 teaspoons of salt and 2 whole cloves.

4. Simmer briskly until the potatoes are soft. (Test them with an icepick, as the fewer holes you stab into food the better it will be.)

5. When the potatoes are soft, drain them and shake the pan over the fire to dry them out thoroughly.

6. Put the cooked potatoes in a mixer bowl.

7. Beat until smooth and add 5 tablespoons (2½ ounces) sweet butter, 2 whole eggs (not large), 4 egg yolks, the grated rind of 4 oranges.

8. Beat well. (If you beat the potatoes well enough you can just add water, instead of the butter and eggs. The potatoes won't be as rich but they will still be light and fluffy—if you beat them very well indeed.)

9. Fill the mashed orange potatoes into a pastry tube with a large star tip.

10. Pipe in large rosettes on a well-buttered jelly roll tin.

11. Sprinkle a little melted butter on top and brown under the broiler.

12. Carefully slide a spatula under the rosettes and place them around the duck (or ham or pork) on the hot platter.

Enjoy the thrill of owning truly fine lead crystal by BRYCE

Roslyn—Platinum Band

From the oldest and largest glass house in America dedicated exclusively to hand-blowing fine lead crystal, comes this delightful Roslyn pattern. Notice that the bowl is chaste and delicate with a band of platinum tracing the lip and the graceful stem is laced with fluting to catch the light with jewel-like lustre. Roslyn is available at finer stores in the goblet form pictured here and also in iced-tea, sherbet, claret or footed juice.

Flirtation

To see and to hold lovely Flirtation is to fall in love all over again with the glory of owning fine hand-blown lead crystal. The bowl is upright and regal with an elegant hand-cutting dancing around it like a coronet, while the stem is tall and stately and relatively severe to best complete the design ensemble. Like Roslyn, Flirtation is available as a goblet as shown at the left, or in iced-tea, sherbet, claret or footed juice.

CLASSIC DUCK DINNER

(Chestnut Cream Tart)

eggs
superfine sugar cream of tartar
granulated sugar
1 pound can of unsweetened chestnut puree light rum
sweet butter
pastry shell
heavy cream

To make your meringues, allow 6 eggs to stand at room temperature for 1 hour.

1. Very carefully separate the eggs, being certain not to get even a speck of the yolk in the egg whites or they will not beat up foamy and stiff. If any yolk should fall into the white, remove it with a clean, dry spoon. You will need 3 egg yolks for the cream filling, so put them into a separate bowl.
2. Put the egg whites in a mixer bowl and beat slowly until they form soft peaks.
3. Sift together 1 cup of superfine sugar and ½ teaspoon of cream of tartar.
4. Add to the egg whites slowly, beating all the time.
5. Continue beating quickly, and add a pinch of salt.
6. Beat until the egg whites are thick, very stiff and shiny, and hold their shape.
7. Fill the meringue into a pastry bag with a small, plain tube about the size of a quarter. (Unless you want to shape the meringues with a spoon, à la Marie Antoinette.)
8. Put a small dab of meringue at each corner of a jelly roll pan.
9. Cover the pan with wax paper and paste it down at the corners with the meringue.
10. Pipe the meringue mixture on top in small domes the size and shape of half eggs.
11. Sprinkle the tops well with granulated sugar.
12. Put them into a preheated 275° oven for ½ hour.
13. They should just begin to color and be firm and dry to the touch. (These meringues will be light and crisp. If you bake them in a warmer oven they will be chewy, but for decorating the top of the chestnut tart, or for meringue shells, you want them light and brittle.)
14. Allow the meringues to cool. Then remove them by sliding a small spatula or palette knife under each one.
15. Store them in an airtight tin.

For the chestnut tart, make the following chestnut butter cream:

1. In a mixer bowl put 3 egg yolks (use 3 of the yolks left over from the meringue recipe).
2. Beat them until they are light and fluffy.
3. In a heavy pan put 1 cup of granulated sugar, ¾ cup of water, ¼ teaspoon cream of tartar.
4. Stir over a slow fire until the sugar dissolves.
5. Cook until the mixture forms a light thread (about 230° on a candy thermometer).
6. Turn the mixer on high. While the yolks are beating fast, pour the sugar mixture slowly over them.
7. Continue beating until the mixture is stiff and cold.
8. Add, while beating, ¾ pound (3 sticks) of sweet butter in small pieces, bit by bit. The butter should be at room temperature and slightly soft.
9. Add 1-pound can of unsweetened chestnut purée (there is a sweetened purée, but it is too syrupy).
10. Flavor with 2 or 3 tablespoons of light rum.
11. Fill this chestnut butter cream into a pastry bag. (The butter cream can be made in advance and refrigerated until you are ready to use it. In that case, beat it a bit to soften it before using.)
12. Fill a 9-inch baked pastry shell with the cream, using a spoon or pastry tube.
13. Decorate with 1 cup of heavy cream, whipped and flavored and piped in rosettes through a pastry tube.
14. Place meringues around top.

This chestnut tart will taste delicious no matter how you decorate it, but the whipped cream and meringues give you an opportunity to let your imagination go and make something lovely to look at as well. The small meringue domes can be dusted with cocoa so they resemble toadstools. I confess that no one in his right mind would dream of eating real toadstools (except Alice in Wonderland) but these confections make a delightful decoration. ■

Wait till Frances Miller sees this ad...

(Will she change her mind about organ gimmicks?)

We don't think so.

She and her husband, Walter, are looking at home organs for their new living room.

But there are differences in point of view.

Walter, the man of the house, likes an organ with trick sound effects, console gadgets, zany stops, buttons, lights, etc. Frances, the homemaker, naturally likes a beautiful instrument. But above all, she likes beautiful organ tone.

This is what Allen has. The tone that lasts after the novelty of owning an organ has worn off.

Allen doesn't feature the sound of a boy with whooping cough, or the eruption of a volcano, the screech of brakes or the bark of a dog. (Allen could!)

But what Allen does it does supremely well. So well that world-famous concert organists and symphony orchestras have been profoundly stirred by its performances.

Yes, you can get sound effects on an Allen. Lifelike effects—Carillon, Xylophone, patented Chiff, Chinese Block, Traps, etc. But you don't buy an Allen for them. They come with it.*

You buy an Allen for its tone. A tone that makes every note, every melody, solo passage or ensemble effect more thrilling and real than any other electronic organ you can name.

Ask any church organist about the Allen's reputation for producing the finest tone. And send for our free literature that shows why the Allen is making such a name among homeowners.

* They vary with Allen models

Lady, Lady, Lady! Don't hand-rinse with your new FRIGIDAIRE dishwasher —just shake off the large stuff

No dishwasher is really a disposer. Bones, watermelon rinds, large scraps belong with the garbage. But the new Frigidaire Dishmobile will handle just about everything else. Emulsifies it, floats it down the drain. The technical explanation would bore you stiff, but it's the new Frigidaire high speed reversible pump that does it. Just remember—with a new Frigidaire Custom Imperial Dishmobile, you definitely don't have to hand-rinse your dishes before loading. Think of the time you'll save! And along that same line—you can put in the breakfast dishes, push a button, and they'll be rinsed right away. Then you can wait till evening to do a full day's load. Other features? This is only the beginning! Your Frigidaire dealer has the details. Why not drop by when you have the time? In the meantime, remember—no hand-rinsing!

More recipes for Paula Peck's story on being prepared for drop-in company. Introduction, page 188.

This is an old recipe of Jewish origin. It will keep in the refrigerator for a long time and is delicious when served as a side dish with any pâté, ham, or liverwurst.

Conserve of Radish and Chicken Fat

black or white radishes
1 tbsp. salt for each pint of shredded radish rendered chicken fat (¼ cup for each pint of pressed radish)
½ tsp. black pepper for each pint of radish

Scrape radishes to remove outer skin. Shred coarsely with coarse side of grater. Sprinkle with salt and allow to stand in refrigerator (covered) for at least two hours. Remove from refrigerator. Place shredded radish in a colander or strainer. Rinse with ice water and, with your hands, press out as much water as possible from the radishes, so they are quite dry. Place in a bowl. Add chicken fat and pepper. Pack into clean jars. Cover tightly and store in refrigerator.

Note: To render chicken fat, cut it into small dice-size pieces; place in a heavy saucepan over low heat. When bits of fat look gray rather than yellow, add one small, minced onion. Continue to cook over low heat till onion and bits of fat are brown. Strain into a clean pan. This keeps indefinitely in refrigerator or in an unheated garage.

Indian Scramble
(to serve with drinks)

1 lb. mung beans peanut oil for deep fat frying
½ lb. chickpea flour
1 tsp. curry powder
1 tsp. salt
1 lb. roasted chickpeas (bought already roasted)

Rinse mung beans in plenty of water. Place in a bowl. Cover with warm water and allow to stand overnight. The next day, drain well and dry beans on paper towels. Heat oil to 375°. Put about ¾ cup of mung beans into a strainer with very small holes. Immerse strainer in hot fat holding the handle. The temperature of the fat will immediately go down. Keep mung beans immersed in fat till temperature rises to 375° again. Then remove strainer with beans and drain beans on paper towels. Repeat till all mung beans have been fried.

Combine chickpea flour, curry powder, and salt in a bowl. Add enough buttermilk to make a mixture thick enough to keep its shape —that is, not soft and runny, but not as heavy as a dough. Lower fat temperature to 350°. Put some of chickpea flour mixture into a potato ricer. Place over hot fat and press down handle of ricer so that shreds of chickpea flour mixture fall into hot fat. Fry until shreds are crisp. Remove with strainer spoon and drain on paper towels. Repeat till all of mixture has been fried.

Mix fried mung beans, chickpea flour shreds, and roasted chickpeas together. Sprinkle with plenty of salt, freshly ground black pepper, and a little curry powder, if desired. Spread evenly in an 11″ by 15″ jelly roll pan. Place in a 350° oven for 20 minutes. Remove from oven. Cool completely before packing into clean jars. Cover tightly and keep in refrigerator or freezer. Serve at room temperature or slightly warmed.

Tapenade

This is a peppy, cold, black sauce from Provençe, in the south of France, and is used in varying ways—as a table condiment, with poached fish, or as a garnish for hard-cooked eggs if they are to be a first course. It may also be served as a dip for raw vegetables.

8 oz. firm anchovies that have been packed in oil
1 7-oz. can of tuna fish
⅓ cup capers
4 cloves garlic
24 black olives, pitted juice of 3 lemons
1 tsp. freshly ground black pepper
⅔ cup olive oil (approx.)
¼ cup cognac
rounds of paper to fit tops of jars

Place first seven ingredients into jar of blender. Blend, stopping motor occasionally to scrape down sides of jar. Gradually add olive oil, adding enough to make a sauce that is about as thick as mayonnaise. Pack into jars. Pour cognac over rounds of paper which have been cut to fit tops of jars. Place cognac paper on top of tapenade. If there is any cognac left, pour it on top of papers. Cover jars tightly and store in refrigerator.

Concentrate of Chicken or Beef

A spoonful or two of this concentrate makes a delicious dressing for vegetables and keeps the calory count down. Or try adding a spoonful of concentrate to your vegetables while they are steaming in butter. Any braised meat dish can be vastly improved with a little homemade concentrate.

For practical, work-saving reasons, it is better to make a great deal at once, so it may be necessary for you to find an outsize pot, if you don't already own a large-size canner or pressure cooker. I use a 20-gallon pot which I fill ⅔ with either chicken bones (backs, available at chicken-parts shops), or chicken carcasses that I've accumulated in the freezer. But I also do the same thing with beef and veal bones that I've cajoled from my butcher and kept frozen.

Cover the bones with water. Add a handful of salt and a spoonful or two of monosodium glutamate. Start cooking in a heavy pot over high heat, uncovered. As pot begins to simmer, lower heat and simmer gently at least 24 hours, keeping heat low enough so there is just barely some movement in the pot. After 24 hours, the liquid should be somewhat reduced. Taste for seasoning. If necessary add more salt and m.s.g. Add a peeled onion, three or four stalks of celery, a handful of parsley, and a parsnip if available. Raise heat and permit stock to boil rapidly till vegetables are soft. Cool slightly. Remove bones and vegetables, being sure to press out as much liquid as possible before discarding them.

Cool remaining stock. Remove as much fat from top as possible. The easiest way to do this is to refrigerate it overnight till fat is solid enough to remove it in a single piece, but this may not be practical if you don't have a large refrigerator. An unheated garage works fine for this in cold climates. When you have removed as much fat as you can, replace pot on stove over high heat. Boil stock down till it is only thick enough to coat a metal spoon. Watch it at this stage; it burns easily.

Pour into clean glass jars. Cool, uncovered. Cut some rounds of paper to fit the tops of the jars. Soak them in a little cognac. Fit cognac paper onto tops of cooled jars. Cover tightly and store in refrigerator. Keeps indefinitely.

To make a cup of soup stock, put a tablespoon of concentrate into a cup and fill the cup with water. Two teaspoons of it is an excellent dressing for hot vegetables.

Honey Cake

Here is an old Jewish recipe for honey cake that also keeps indefinitely and is delicious when eaten as is, or when spread with sweet butter or cream cheese.

6 eggs
⅔ cup olive oil grated rind of 1 lemon grated rind of 1 orange
2 cups dark buckwheat honey
½ tsp. cinnamon
¼ tsp. cloves
¼ tsp. ginger
3 tbsp. strong coffee
½ tsp. soda
¾ cup sugar
4 cups sifted all-purpose flour
½ cup light sultana raisins
2 tsp. baking powder
1 cup blanched, sliced almonds

Line two 13″ by 5″ by 3″ loaf pans with brown paper. Set oven at 325°. Separate eggs. To the yolks, add oil, fruit rinds, honey, spices, coffee, and soda. Stir together.

Add salt to egg whites. Beat whites till they are firm and hold soft peaks. Gradually beat in sugar, adding a tablespoon at a time.

Add two tablespoons flour to raisins and mix. Add baking powder to remaining flour. Pour stirred honey mixture into stiffly beaten egg whites. Sprinkle flour on top. Fold all gently together, adding floured raisins.

Pour into prepared loaf pans, filling them no more than halfway. Sprinkle almonds on top. Bake in 325° oven for 1¼ hours. Do not open oven door before at least one hour has passed. Test by sticking a toothpick into center of cakes. If nothing sticks to it, the cakes are done. Otherwise, continue baking 15 or more minutes. Remove from oven. Loosen from sides of pans. Turn out on cake rack. When completely cool, wrap in aluminum foil. Then place in plastic bag and store at room temperature. This cake gets better as it stands. ■

SLEEPY HOLLOW GIFTS

1037 Crane Drive, Dept. B12, Falls Church, Va.

Little Kim was abandoned by her mother in an alley of Seoul, Korea. She was found curled up behind a box, shivering, hungry and frightened.

Her G.I. father probably doesn't even know she exists. And since Kim is a mixed-blood child, no relative will ever claim her.

Her future? Well, that's up to you. Look at her! Her every movement and gesture seems to be a plea for someone to love her. Will you?

For only $10 a month you or your group can "adopt" a boy or girl equally as needy as Kim, in your choice of the countries listed.

You will receive the child's picture, life history, and the opportunity to exchange letters, Christmas cards—and love.

Since 1938 American sponsors have found this to be the beginning of a warm personal friendship with a deserving child, making it possible for Christian Children's Fund to assist children in orphanages, schools, and special projects around the world.

Won't you help? Today?

Sponsors needed to help children in the following countries this month: Korea, Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong, India, American Indians.

A TREAT FROM DENMARK!

ALL-READY-TO-SERVE

Trust the food-loving Danes to come up with an idea like this: a festive collection of party-time meats that keep without refrigeration. Put a Pic-A-Snak assortment on the pantry shelf—open them one by one or all at once—and there's an instant gourmet taste treat waiting.

Open one can and out pops a full pound Danish smoked salami gently garlic flavored. Open another, and there before you is a pound and a half of just about the pinkest, leanest, most succulent ham you've ever tasted. Or try the pound of Royal Danish luncheon loaf seasoned in the continental manner. Keep on sampling! Taste that pound of lean, tender loin of pork. Delicious! Have a man-sized serving from the twelve full ounces of corned beef. And, for very special mornings, use the pound of Danish cured breakfast bacon. All this for $8.95.

Or better yet, get a king-size assortment (two tins of each — except luncheon loaf and pork loin). Over ten pounds of superb meats for only $14.95.

Concluding our alphabetical trail through the complex world of wines, guided by one of the great experts on the subject

By FRANK SCHOONMAKER

VAUCLUSE (Vo-cluze). French département in the lower Rhone Valley, a Papal enclave in the days of the Avignon Popes (1309-1377) and for long thereafter. Its wines include Châteauneuf-du-Pape, Gigondas, Rasteau, and many pleasant lesser wines, rosés and reds especially, often sold as Côtes du Ventoux, etc.

VARIETAL WINE. A wine, in most cases one from California or New York State, which takes its name, not from a town or district but from the variety of grapes out of which it is principally made. Varietal tables wines include most of the best of the U.S., for example, Cabernet Sauvignon, Pinot Noir, Johannisberg Riesling, Pinot Chardonnay, Grenache, Delaware, Elvira, etc., as distinguished from so-called "generic" wines such as California Claret, New York State Burgundy, etc. According to American law, a wine may only carry a varietal name if it is made at least 51 percent from the variety in question.

With a few exceptions, notably the wines of Alsace, Switzerland, Austria, and the Italian Tyrol, European wines do not carry varietal names. This is due to the fact that the grape varieties grown and used in the fine wine districts abroad are specifically limited and designated, both by tradition and by law. Hence, varietal names for most fine European wines are implicit in the wines' Appellation d'Origine—its legally protected geographical name.

V.D.Q.S., or VINS DÉLIMITÉS DE QUALITÉ SUPERIEURE (Van Day-lee-me-tay duh Cahl-lee-tay Soo-pay-ree-err). Category of French wines, including many of truly superior quality, which are nevertheless not legally entitled to an Appellation Controlée. They are, however, strictly controlled by the French Government as to production zone, grape varieties, and yield per acre. When shipped, their labels carry a special stamp with the initials V.D.Q.S. and the words "label de Garantie." The "garantie" in question is an official one and the stamp may only appear on wines produced in accordance with the Government's rules, wines, in addition, which have been tasted and approved by a committee of impartial experts. There are over fifty such wines as of the present. Some of the better-known ones are: Côtes du Luberon, Côtes de Provence, Costiéres du Gard, Minervois, Corbiéres, etc.

VELOUTÉ (Vel-loo-tay). Literally, in French, "velvety": wine [illegible] term, applied to wines that are notably mature, [illegible] fine-textured, and soft, as soyeux, or "silky."

VENETO (Vain-nay-toe). The region of Venice, fifth in wine production among Italian regions, some 80 million gallons a year. Much of this is quite ordinary but much, too, is good. Especially notable are the wines of Verona: Bardolino, Valpolicella, Soave; and those of the province of Treviso, but there are many others that belong in a somewhat lesser category: Raboso, Friularo, Colli Euganei, etc.

VERDICCHIO (Vair-dee-key-o). Superior Italian white wine grape; also its wine.

VERMOUTH (from the German Wermut—wormwood). A fortified white wine, flavored with various herbs, barks, seeds, spices, etc. The principal aromatic agent in vermouth consists of flowers of the shrub Artemisia absinthium, also known as wormwood (the far more toxic leaves of the same plant are used in the making of Absinthe). Today, vermouth is used principally as an apéritif and as a cocktail ingredient. There are two main types: French and Italian. The French, pale in color, quite dry; the Italian, darker, usually with a base of muscat wine, quite sweet. French type vermouths are, nevertheless, made in Italy, and Italian type vermouths, in France. Both are produced in many other countries, including Spain, Argentina, and the United States, and are based on similar wines and the same aromatics, including Artemisia flowers, bitter orange peel, camomile, aloes, cardamon, and anise. The better American vermouths are now substantially as good as the imported.

VERT (Vair). French wine tasters' term, applied to wines that are "green," or unripe, in the same sense as unripe fruit, disagreeably high in acid, and tart. In many cases this is a fault that will correct itself with time, and if the wine is otherwise well-balanced, it can be an indication (though by no means an assurance) of good future development and long life.

VIN NATURE (Van Nah-tewr). A rather loosely used French wine term meaning, in general, a wine that has not been fortified or sweetened; in some cases, a Champagne which has received no dosage or sweetening during its maturing.

VINTAGE. Word used in a confusing diversity of senses in English, often practically as a synonym for wine. Properly, however, the vintage is the annual grape harvest and the wine made from those grapes. To this extent, at least, every year is a vintage year and all wines are vintage wines unless they are blended—their vintage is the year they were produced. However, during the 19th Century, it became common practice in a few wine growing districts, notably the Port country and Champagne, to blend all wines except those of unusually good years, and to allow only the latter to carry a date or vintage. Eventually, in the popular mind, in England and the United States, "vintage year" came to have the meaning of "good year," although it can have no possible such connotation except with regard to Champagne and Port. In Bordeaux, Burgundy, the Rhineland, etc., there are good vintages and bad (the latter, alas, all too frequent), but almost every wine carries its vintage on its label and is, therefore, by any sensible definition, a vintage wine, whether good or bad.

In most wine-producing countries, especially those fairly far north, there is a great difference in quality between the wines of one year and another. Vintage years are important, and a reliable vintage chart can be very helpful. This is not so much the case in areas of less variable climate and more consistent sunshine, such as California and, to some extent, the lower Rhone Valley, Italy, and Spain.

VOLLRADS. Schloss (Vawl-rahdz). The largest and one of the most famous vinyard estates of the Rheingau, back of the village of Winkel, and just east of Schloss Johannisberg. The castle itself, with a picturesque keep, or central tower, dating from 1355, is a splendid old manor house, and its 81 acres of vines produce an extremely wide range of estate-bottlings, all the way from the light, dry, modest Original-Abfüllung of secondary years to incomparable Trockenbeerenauslesen in great vintages. Wines considered unworthy of the Schloss label never are allowed to carry it, but those granted this diploma make up what is perhaps the most complicated hierarchy of classes, grades, labels, and capsules in the whole, often complicated, world of wine. Before attempting to explain this, it may be well to say that Vollrads wines, with practically no exceptions, have to some degree a certain characteristic elegance, a fine bouquet, a pleasing lightness and fruit.

Of those permitted to bear the name of the owner (Graf Matuschka-Greiffenklau—who is a chess-player) and his coat-of-arms, the least expensive are those that carry the words Original-Abfüllung and a green capsule; those with a green-capsule-with-silver-stripe are of slightly superior class, and if the stripe is gold, they are considered a shade better. On a higher level (a difference distinguishable by an expert, but by no means a giant step) are the three representatives of the red-capsule family—red, red-with-silver, red-with-gold.

We next move into what might be called "Officers' Quarters," and here once more we have the full range: two colors, three grades of each. But in this category the labels are marked, not Original-Abfüllung, but Schlossabzug—bottled by the Castle rather than the owner, although in fact, of course, both bottled both. Here, as before, we have green capsule and red capsule, and three sorts of each, with superiority indicated by silver and gold stripes, and in the same order.

When it comes to higher echelons, Schloss Vollrads does does not use the word Spätlese on any of its labels (although wines have been known to be so marked by dishonest merchants) and the equivalent, here, is Kabinett. These wines now wear a blue capsule, once more divided into blue, blue-plus-silver, and blue-plus-gold stripes. Then, of course, we have Auslese, Beerenauslese, Trockenbeerenauslese, Bestes Fass, in this ascending order. Almost all of these are superb, and worth whatever they cost.

It is to be regretted, certainly, that some simpler method of classification and quality identification cannot be found for a collection of wines, however good, produced by just 81 acres in a good vintage.

VOSNE-ROMANÉE (Vone-Ro-Ma-nay). Perhaps the most remarkable wine-producing commune of all France, though its total production is comparatively small. Within its communal limits are grown some seven or eight truly incomparable red wines, the glories of Burgundy, known round the world: Romanée-Conti, Richebourg, La Tâche, La Romanée, all labeled simply with the vineyard name and no mention of Vosne; then, having Vosne-Romanée as part of their name, Vosne-Romanée La Grande Rue, Les Malconsorts, Les Suchots, Les Beaux-Monts, and many others. All of them (even the lesser wine sold simply as Vosne-Romanée) have certain characteristics in common: breed, elegance, exceptional balance, fine bouquet.

VOUVRAY (Voo-vray). The most famous white wine of Touraine, in the Loire Valley of France, and an old American favorite, perhaps due to the fact that AFHQ, in World War I, was set up in nearby Tours. It is made entirely from the Chenin Blanc grape, and the legally delimited zone of production consists of eight communes: Vouvray, Ste. Radegonde, Rochecorbon, Vernou, Noizay, Chancay, Reugny, and Parçay-Meslay. A changeling among wines if there ever was one, Vouvray can be (depending on its vintage and its cellar treatment) a fruity, bone-dry wine, somewhat on the tart side; a rich, golden elixir, comparable to a great Sauternes or Rhine wine; a pale and appetizing wine with a slight sparkle (pétillant); an out-and-out sparkling wine, and one of the best of France. Despite much that has been said and written to the contrary, Vouvray does "travel"; it is also one of the longest-lived white wines of the world. Total production is in the neighborhood of three-quarters of a million gallons a year.

WACHENHEIM (Vahk-hen-heim). One of the four best wine-producing towns of the German Rheinpfalz or Palatinate. Its wines are a little lighter than those of Forst and Deidesheim nearby, but of the same noble class. There are some 840 acres of vineyard, about 25 percent of this in Riesling grapes, most of the rest in Sylvaner. Leading vineyards

WHY aren't they PLAYING?

Nobody's playing yet, because that glamorous new Story & Clark Organ has just arrived. Later tonight, they'll all be playing. (Truly they will, because NO other organ is so EASY to play!)

Niels P. Andersen writes from Virginia "I could not read a note or play any instrument when I bought your wonderful organ. Having now had a few lessons, I am surprised how easy it is to play, how splendid it sounds.

"I am 34, in the selling profession, and when I come home and play it at night, it relaxes me so that I do a better selling job next day. So your wonderful organ is paying for itself."

It will pay you in fun and dollars to see and hear the new Story & Clarks. For one thing, they're the equivalent of much larger organs — at much less cost! Write for details! Ask for Bulletin C. Address: Story & Clark, 1214 Central Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois 60091.

STORY & CLARK

The World's Most Beautiful

include: Wachenheimer Gerümpel, Böhlig, Rechbächel, Goldbachel, Luginsland, and Langebächel. The leading producer is Dr. Bürklin Wolf.

WALDMEISTER (Wahld-my-ster). German name for the wild herb, woodruff (asperula odorata, of the madder family) which is the principal flavoring in what is known as May Wine, a popular sort of wine punch in Germany.

WENTE (Went-te). Famous California wine-growing family whose vineyards have long produced some of America's finest white wines. Their first vines were planted near Livermore, in Alameda County, southeast of San Francisco, in 1883, and the business has remained a family enterprise ever since. A number of outstanding varietal wines are made, including Pinot Chardonnay, Pinot Blanc, Dry Semillon, Sauvignon Blanc, Grey Riesling, etc., plus a few that carry generic names such as Chablis and a certain number of less outstanding red and rosé wines as well.

WHITE PINOT. California name for the white wine grape more properly called Chenin Blanc, or Pineau de la Loire.

YEASTY. Wine tasters' term, applied almost exclusively to young wines in barrel, which still have the odor of yeast or fermentation or lees. This is not a grave fault, and indeed some connoisseurs of Muscadet and of Swiss wines consider it a virtue and prefer their wines with this goût de lie. In any case, it will usually disappear as soon as the wine has been "racked" (transferred from one cask to another, leaving the sediment, or lees, behind).

YQUEM. Château d' (Dee-kem). The incomparable Grand Premier Cru of Sauternes; the one wine, red or white, to be accorded this exalted rank in 1855, a higher classification even than the great Clarets. It is probably the most famous as well as the most valuable vineyard estate in the world, and its superb 15th-century chateau dominates its vine-covered hillsides like a queen. For nearly two hundred years this acreage near the southern edge of the Bordeaux region has been the property of the Lur-Saluces family.

Over a century ago the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia (brother of the Czar) paid the then staggering price of 20,000 gold francs for four barrels of the 1847 vintage, and Yquem has been, ever since, one of the most consistently expensive of all wines. Its vineyard, as might be expected, is one of those with the lowest yield per acre—an average of about 120 gallons, as compared with nearly three times as much for Château Lafite or Chambertin. There are some 200 acres under vines—Semillon, Sauvignon Blanc, and a small amount of Muscadelle du Bordelais. The grapes are picked in successive tries, or harvestings, as the pourriture noble, or botrytis reaches its peak, and the resulting wine is of course high in alcohol (13-16 percent), very sweet (with from three percent to seven percent of unfermented sugar), luscious, almost creamy, with extraordinary fruit and breed.

The Château d'Yquems of great vintages are truly fabulous—the ne plus ultra of dessert wines, but even those of lesser years are remarkable, less overpowering, but with classic distinction and finesse.

Until quite recently much of the wine produced at Yquem in "off" years, which failed to attain its normal degree of alcohol and sweetness, was sold off in bulk without the chateau label, as "Bordeaux Supérieur." About as dry as a medium Graves, with considerable breed and bouquet, this obviously deserved a better fate, and a special name and label have now been created for it—Château Y. The letter Y, in French, is called i grec and the wine's name is pronounced, therefore, Château Ee-greck. It is produced only in secondary vintages and is of course considerably cheaper than Yquem.

Coulibiac
(Fillet of Beef Baked in Brioche Pastry)
Serves 6 to 8

brioche dough (prepared beforehand, recipe below)
eggs
2-pound piece of fillet of beef (the thick end) kosher salt
black peppercorns
Calvados
¼ pound of sliced boiled ham
Dijon mustard
salt butter
1 can of liver pâté (4-oz. size)
white peppercorns

1. On a rack in a shallow roasting pan, put a 2-pound piece of fillet of beef (from the thick end).
2. Roast it, absolutely plain, in a preheated 375° oven for 50 minutes.
3. Remove the partially cooked beef and, after it is cool, carefully strip off all fat, skin, and sinew.
4. Rub the meat all over with coarse kosher salt and freshly cracked black pepper.
5. Sprinkle the meat thoroughly with Calvados (place your thumb over the bottle opening and shake liberally).
6. Tie white string tightly around the meat near both ends and in the middle.
7. Wrap it tightly in aluminum foil.
8. Leave it in the deep freeze for about 30 minutes. (You want the meat well chilled so that it won't overcook when it is baked in the pastry.)

1. On a sheet of wax paper lay out four thin slices of boiled ham.
2. Lay them side by side so that they form one large sheet of ham.
3. Sprinkle with Calvados.
4. Spread with a little Dijon mustard.

1. In a mixer, cream 8 tablespoons (1 stick) of slightly soft salt butter.
2. Add 1 can of liver pâté (4-ounce size), a little salt, and a little freshly ground white pepper.
3. Beat well and add 2 tablespoons of Calvados.
4. Spread this mixture on the ham.
5. Remove the beef from the freezer.
6. Unwrap and untie it.
7. Lay it on top of the pâté and wrap it well with the ham.

1. Butter an oven-glass bread mold.
2. Take a full recipe of brioche dough from the refrigerator.
3. Roll out a little over half the dough on a lightly floured board.
4. Line the buttered mold carefully with the dough.
5. Brush the edges with a whole beaten egg.
6. Put the ham-wrapped fillet of beef in the center.
7. Cover with another piece of rolled-out brioche dough.
8. Tuck in the edges of this top piece securely with a knife, so that when the dough rises it will be well anchored.
9. Cover with a clean cloth, place it on a jelly roll pan, and allow it to rise (or prove), out of drafts and in a warm room, for 25 minutes.
10. Brush the top of the dough with a beaten egg.
11. Bake in a preheated 400° oven for 30 minutes, then at 375° for 30 minutes.
12. If the crust should get too brown before the time is up, reduce the oven heat and cover the top with a brown paper bag.
13. Remove the Coulibiac from the oven and allow it to settle in the mold for 5 minutes.
14. Then slide the blade of a knife around the edges. Turn out and serve on a warmed oval silver platter fitted with a wooden carving board.

The Coulibiac should be sliced and eaten piping hot so that the juices from the rare meat soak into the brioche pastry. It makes dunking quite unnecessary, and indeed the only other things you do need are a nice crisp salad and a fire on the hearth.

Brioche Dough

yeast
all-purpose flour
salt butter
eggs

1. In a measuring cup put ½ cup of lukewarm water (be sure it is tepid and not hot).
2. Dissolve in it 2 packages of yeast or 2 yeast cakes.
3. In a small bowl, measure 1 cup of all-purpose flour.
4. Add the dissolved yeast and water.
5. Stir with a wooden spoon until you get a thick mass.
6. Turn this dough out onto a lightly floured board and knead it. (Press it out flat with your hands; pick up the far edge and fold it over toward you; push the dough away from you with the heels of your hands lightly; turn the dough, fold it over toward you again, and again push it away from you.)
7. Continue kneading until you get a smooth surface on the bottom of the dough.
8. Take the ball of dough and with a sharp knife cut a cross on its top, as you would a hot cross bun.
9. Open up the four points to make it look like a flower.
10. Drop this dough "flower" into a pitcher of lukewarm water. (Take great care not to get the water too hot or it will kill your yeast.)
11. Leave it until the expanding dough "flower" rises to the top (about 10 to 15 minutes).

1. In a mixer bowl, beat 10 ounces (2½ sticks) of salt butter. (This is easier to do if the butter is not too hard and cold.)
2. When it is light and creamy, remove the butter to another bowl but—good news!—don't wash the mixer bowl or beater.
3. Put into the mixer bowl 3 cups of all-purpose flour, 1 teaspoon of salt, 1 tablespoon of sugar, and 7 eggs.
4. Stir these ingredients with a wooden spoon to mix them roughly, then beat by machine until the mixture is shiny.
5. Add the creamed butter and mix well.
6. Carefully lift the yeast "flower" from the pitcher of warm water. (Be sure you remove it as soon as it has risen to the surface.)
7. Cradle it in your hands to let all the liquid drain off. The ball of dough will feel warm and alive (as indeed it is).
8. Add it to the mixture and beat until all is well blended.
9. Wipe out a large china bowl with a damp cloth and dust it lightly with flour.
10. Put the brioche dough in, and cover the bowl tightly with transparent wrap.
11. Cover it with a cloth and leave it at room temperature, protected from drafts, until the dough rises to double its bulk. (About 1 hour, but watch it, as the time varies and you don't want the dough to rise too much.)
12. When the dough has risen, break the rise by stirring it a few times until it has sunk to its original level. (This permits some of the gas to escape, and lets in fresh oxygen.)
13. Cover the bowl of dough with transparent wrap and place it in

Salad d'Endive
(Belgian Endive Salad)
Serves 6 to 8

8 endives
French dressing
parsley

1. Wash the endive well in cold salted water, then in clear cold water.
2. Shake well in a salad basket, and dry thoroughly on paper towels.
3. Discard any outer leaves that are discolored.
4. Cut endive stalks in half lengthwise and separate all the leaves.
5. Place them in a small wooden salad bowl and pour over them a little of your favorite French dressing.
6. Sprinkle them well with freshly chopped parsley.

Imported Belgian endive is not easily available. If you cannot find it, serve plain green salad instead.

Mousse au Chocolat à la Normande
(Normandy Chocolate Mousse)
Serves 6

¾ pound of dark sweet chocolate
24 cats' tongues or ladyfingers light rum
sweet butter
confectioners' sugar
eggs vanilla bean salted almonds
2 cups of heavy cream
1½ yards of satin ribbon (1" wide)

Take a 1-quart charlotte mold.
1. Cut a circle of heavy white writing paper to fit the bottom of the mold exactly.
2. Line the sides of the mold with 24 cats' tongues (Allemagne Buiscotti, sold in packages) or 24 ladyfingers if they are good and firm.
3. Put a speck of butter on the flat side of the cats' tongues or ladyfingers, and stick them to the walls of the charlotte mold, standing upright. Be most careful not to leave gaps or spaces between them.

Fill the lined mold with the following mousse:
1. Cut into small pieces ¾ pound of dark sweet chocolate.
2. Put into a medium-size heavy pan with 5 tablespoons of light rum and 2 tablespoons of water.
3. Stir with a wooden spoon over a very slow fire until the chocolate dissolves.
4. Remove from the fire to cool, but do not allow chocolate to set.

In a mixer bowl:
1. Cream 12 tablespoons (6 ounces—1½ sticks) of sweet butter. (It is always preferable to have butter at room temperature for creaming, or else cut it into small pieces.)
2. When it is light and creamy, add ½ cup of confectioners' sugar.
3. Beat very well. Then, one at a time, add 3 egg yolks (the whites are to be beaten separately), ½ cup of finely ground salted almonds (the almonds can be pulverized in an electric blender), and the cool chocolate.

In a metal bowl, over another bowl of ice:
1. Whip, with a large metal whisk, two cups of heavy cream.
2. Beat until cream begins to thicken, then add ¼ cup of confectioners' sugar, 2 inches of vanilla bean, slit open lengthwise, with its little seeds thoroughly scraped into the cream. (The scraped pod can then be put in a canister or jar of granulated sugar to make vanilla sugar.)
3. Continue beating until the cream is stiff enough to hold its shape.
4. Add to the chocolate mixture ½ of the whipped cream and 3 egg whites beaten to soft peaks.
5. Blend carefully with a rubber scraper.
6. Fill mixture into the lined mold.
7. Cover top with transparent wrap and freeze for 2 hours.
8. Run a knife carefully between mold and cats' tongues or ladyfingers, and turn out on a flat serving dish. Remove the circle of white paper from the top.
9. Decorate with the rest of the whipped cream, which has been filled into a pastry bag with a rose tube.
10. Pipe rosettes of cream around the top.
11. Tie the satin ribbon around the sides. It will cover the spots of butter on the outside of the cats' tongues. Besides, many French cakes are traditionally brought to the table decorated with a satin ribbon and bow, and it is a charming Gallic touch. ■

Now the easiest instrument is easier than ever

Called the Guitaro, this ingenious hybrid combines the freedom of guitar-like action with the reassuring simplicity of the Auto-harp

▪ The Auto-harp, among those who know it best, is affectionately called the "idiot's delight." Nothing could be easier to play. When something this simple is improved upon, it's worthy of attention.

As on the Auto-harp, you can play full-bodied chords on the Guitaro by pushing a key, which is marked with the name of the chord, and by strumming across the strings.

Play the chords as they are marked on sheet music and song books, and you have a pleasing musical accompaniment for singing. The instruction book with the instrument has 29 songs to get you started.

There are 15 chord bars. This allows you to play in the major keys of C, F, G, and D; plus the minor A, D, and E. The instrument is meant for chording but is not limited to this. You can play melodies on the pre-tuned strings, as on a harp. Strings are close together, and a pick is best for this kind of playing.

To hear the possibilities on an instrument like this, listen to the virtuoso performance of Cecil Null on New Sounds in Folk Music. (Briar Records, M-107, $3.98.)

The Guitaro can be held like a guitar while sitting or standing, and the right hand falls naturally and easily over the strings. The left hand is in place to press the clearly marked chord keys.

The 24 strings are tuned chromatically. When a chord bar is pressed down, felt pads silence all but the strings used for that chord. You can strum across all the strings, or strum the bass strings, and then the treble, for special effects. It can be tuned to a piano, or a chromatic pitch pipe—which sells for about $2.50. ■

the most festive fiesta on the calendar

Gaudy and glorious, touching and tumultuous. Christmas is the year's most colorful celebration in a land where fiestas happen every day all year long

• In one respect, Mexico defies the statisticians: No one has yet come up with a final figure on its annual production of fiestas. There are the thirteen national holidays which, of course, are celebrated everywhere. And it is well known that every town of whatever size will naturally stage a fiesta once a year in honor of its patron saint. What clouds the count are the innumerable regional, village, and neighborhood fiestas, to say nothing of the intimate family-type fiestas which literally break out into fireworks upon the arrival, departure, or even during the visit of a relative or guest. It is fair to assume that somewhere, all year long, at any given Mexican moment, rockets are sizzling, bands playing, churchbells ringing, natives rejoicing.

But it is generally conceded that you haven't experienced the real McCoy in this prevalent public partying until you've experienced a Christmas fiesta. This heady holiday begins on December 16th (Please turn the page)

and ends, technically, on December 24th, but actually doesn't quite lose its momentum until Epiphany, the Feast of the Three Kings, which falls on January 6th.

No matter where in Mexico you go, you'll never forget Christmas, but connoisseurs tend to divide the palm for remarkable yuletide goings-on between Oaxaca and San Miguel de Allende.

We can't vouch for San Miguel, but Oaxaca, with its vibrant mix of deeply rooted Indian and Spanish-bred cultures, comes up with Christmas in a way most north-of-the-border Americans have to see to believe.

There are the nine pre-Christmas nights of the charming, sensitively sweet posadas, in which groups of songsters—not too unlike our own Christmas Eve carolers—move from house to house, uttering a stylized plea that Mary and Joseph be received within. The occupants, also in traditional song, deny them entrance. Eventually, after this symbolic wandering, they are received in one of the houses. From this point on, a party ensues, invariably centering around the piñata, a giddily paper-trimmed, papier-mâché form which might represent anything from a burro to a steamboat. Crammed full of goodies, sweetmeats, and favors, it is suspended so that it may be teasingly raised and lowered. One at a time the children are blindfolded and given a chance to shatter the piñata by beating it with a stick. When it is broken, the riches tumble out and are shared by all.

To compound the gaiety of the season in this town where the roses are supposed never to stop blooming, December 18th is the feast of the Virgin of Soledad, or Dolorosa. She is the lovely patroness of Oaxaca who is said to have arrived miraculously on the scene in the saddlebag of a lone, cyclopean donkey. She wears, incidentally, magnificently clad, somewhat as you will see her in her niche in the Church of La Soledad. She is charmingly seated in a parade of flowers with blossom-filled boughs, showers of starry fireworks, and the brass, authoritative Oaxaca municipal band. This quintessentially gringo performs often and generously from its bandstand in the Zócalo of the town, the central square which is always the heart of any Mexican town.

Christmas Tree Candelabrum, 27" tall, 17" wide. In untinted tin, $16. Tinted in bright, brash Mexican colors, $18.

Tin Dove, its open back ready to hold candies, favors, or flowers is 11" long, 6" high, sold in sets of 3, $18.

Flying Angel, in bright-tinted tin, holds a taper, hangs from a ring, measuring 14" long, is sold in pairs, $10.

Hardly catching its breath, and certainly not its sleep, Oaxaca piles fiesta upon fiesta with the Noche de Rábanos, or Carnival of Radishes, on December 23rd. This is an Indian harvest home fete. Symbols of the occasion for sale around the zócalo are great white radishes, carved into human shapes and for some mystic reason much in demand by the farmers. All fiestas tend to be hard on the ears and dazzling to the eyes, but this one is also tough on the feet. On this feast it is de rigueur to eat buñuelos—thin, syrup-laden pancakes—served on pottery plates. These are thrown to the ground and smashed underfoot, so that the crowd is eventually shuffling through a mulch of pottery shards.

THE climax of the season is the triumphant, candlelit procession of Christmas Eve, which winds through streets garlanded with streamers and lights, past the Ferris wheels and merry-go-rounds and the gaudy carnival stands. The 35 churches of Oaxaca all take part. At midnight, amid the greatest pealing of bells you ever heard and salvos of cannon and fireworks which last till daylight, the parade enters the cathedral, where the solemn Christmas masses are sung.

Fiesta, as you might suppose, involves crowds, noise, socializing, and a good-natured acceptance of whatever comes along. Christmas in Oaxaca is particularly jammed, but especially fascinating as an ethnic spectacle. This charming town, with its arcaded streets and dignified old-world buildings (usually of the local green stone), presents the romantic Spanish-Colonial aspect you expect things Mexican to have. But it is also the city of Indians who were rulers of this land long before the Aztecs. Here and in the outlying areas live descendants of the Miztecs and Zapotecs who built the fabulous pyramids and palaces which you can visit five miles away to the southwest at Monte Alban, or 24 miles to the southeast at Mitla.

One Oaxacan afternoon in the plaza before the twin-towered 16th-century Church of Santo Domingo you may watch the four-hour-long ceremonial dance of devout, worshipful Indians, their giant feathered headdresses and sequined costumes flashing in the sun, their measured steps responding to the primitive music of reed and drum. You may sit under the shady arches that line the zócalo, sipping your coffee as in a European sidewalk café. You may visit a jewelry store to shop for gold chains and filigree, specialties of Oaxaca, or for fine reproductions of the early Zapotec jewelry, which has been found in Tomb Seven of the archaeological digs at Monte Alban. You may visit a colonial house which is now the museum-repository of these jewels. A Saturday-morning must is the market, almost universally considered Mexico's most colorful and richest in desirable design and craftsmanship, for Oaxaca is the center of a region of Indian villages that are skilled in handcrafts. Look for wonderfully woven wools and cottons, in colorful belts, serapes, rebozos, and the three-cornered, poncho-like quetchkimls which the women wear. Look for the indigenous, gunmetal-black pottery, basketwork of every kind, sisal hammocks, leather goods, and cutlery.

Drive, well fortified with sun lotion and the wise tripper's stout walking shoes, to Mitla, and you can experience both the ancient grandeur of an incredible Miztec palace city and, on its outskirts, a modern Zapotec village which makes the weaving of rebozos a specialty. (If you're fortunate, you may be able to pick up a silk one, now rather rare.) Take the time to visit the small, privately supported Museum of Zapotecan Art. And if you make this trip on December 31st, stay on for the Zapotecs' candlelit and curious annual Wishing Night. Mixing the Christian and the pagan, the Indians erect a cross, then place around it miniature effigies of their hearts' desires for the year to come.

GETTING to Oaxaca from Mexico City is most conveniently maneuvered by an 80-minute flight via Mexican Airlines ($26.32), although it is possible to drive by first-class bus and also to go by train, but this is a long-winded overnight journey that you might wish to avoid.

Once on the Oaxacan scene, especially during the boisterous days of Christmas fiesta, accommodations removed from the zócalo are recommended. Oaxaca Courts, out of town on the Pan American Highway, promises a good night's sleep at $10 single, $14 double, and the food is good. The Victoria Hotel is also a bit removed, at $6 single, $8 double. The Marques de Valle, on the zócalo, has rooms from $6 single and $9.60 double.

It is the meaning of Christmas that the hearth be as open as an innocent heart, that its welcome be as loving as a child's embrace.

If the heart is open, so must be the house

• "At Christmas play and make good cheer, for Christmas comes but once a year," wrote Thomas Tusser in 1580 A.D. Now, as then, Christmas crowns the year with celebration, and especially with hospitality. The battered suitcases of wanderers tumble out of car trunks and jet planes and materialize on the stair landing. Roommates of the school year double and triple up in bedrooms. Beaux are discovered reposing on living-room sofas in the dawn's early light. The season can't be allowed to pass without getting together with those old friends who moved to the other side of town, or without sitting down and catching up with one's nearest and dearest. The new neighbors may feel lonely, so of course they must be invited over. Someone who is far from home must be drawn into a family circle. Someone who has no one has you and yours. One big party won't handle the matter. If the heart is open, so must be the house. Here's how to throw open the Christmas house with joy and serenity. ■

PHILIP ROEDEL

Most of the holiday trimmings you'll see throughout this issue are from HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S Eleventh Annual Collection of Christmas Decorations. All are described, with prices and shopping information, on page 196.

This Christmas Join in the revels and still be the hostess

• It is reasonable to wish that Thomas Tusser had included in his Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry a few hints of good housewifery for the hospitable season. Even in the best-organized establishments, some strain may be intrinsic when the house is bursting at the seams with good cheer. No blueprint can be devised to suit every situation, but there are a few ground rules for getting the house ready for holiday company.

1. Do everything possible in advance.

Thorough cleaning—waxing floors, polishing furniture and chandeliers, vacuuming carpets and curtains and upholstery—will make the house easier to keep in order during the holidays. If you lack assistance, investigate a contract cleaner who will move in a crew and do the job in a few hours.

Polish all silver. Check linens, china, and crystal.

Have mechanical equipment checked or serviced—dishwasher, laundry equipment, television sets, and record player. A breakdown during the season can be very trying. Some service companies offer yearly contracts for maintenance. Maybe this is a good time to initiate such a one.

Plan and install all decorations. Plan the centerpiece for Christmas dinner or other occasions. Order flowers, greens, and plants. Before Christmas Eve, get rid of the debris that always goes with Christmas decorations.

Make all necessary arrangements for extra help—waitress, laundress, baby-sitter, and snow shovelers if necessary.

Assign rooms for house guests and make all preparations for their comfort before they arrive—coat hangers, empty shelves and closet space, fresh shelf and drawer papers, a clock, radio, portable TV, new magazines and books, extra blankets and bedding, towels laid out, bathroom arrangements defined. Do not change your mind.

Plan menus, and market. Christmas falls on Friday this year, so this will require planning and marketing for at least a three-day weekend.

Telephone invitations, because mails may be unreliable. Plan to be flexible about extra guests. Other people will also have company.

2. Do not try to do everything yourself.

If you have full-time or part-time help, take them into your confidence and let them know what you expect of them during the holidays. Try not to spring surprises on your help. They may not be as flexible or sophisticated as you are.

If members of your family have reached the age of usefulness, press them into service with established chores. Give them individual responsibilities—seeing that the beds are made, seeing that the living room is tidied, seeing that the table is cleared, the fire tended, wood brought in, walks clear of snow.

If house guests wish to be helpful, don't deny them the pleasure. Many visitors feel happier and more at home if they are assigned duties. If you don't tell them what they can do, they may simply add to the confusion by continually asking you.

If you have young children, get help or put them in charge of someone reliable (Please turn the page)

continued

Christmas is for children, and they deserve a share in it. They also need routines of feeding, sleep, and rest to keep them from being fretful.

3. Keep your planning simple.

For the small, intimate occasion that can be the true joy of Christmas, don't feel that you have to have elaborate dishes, many courses, or special entertainment. A tureen of soup after a cocktail party, a game of cards followed by dessert and coffee, a one-dish supper served from a chafing dish may have more appeal than the fancy menu at a time when we are all overexposed to rich food.

Simple and durable table decorations that will not wilt or wither and will last out the season without any attention are better than perishable arrangements.

Restrained house decorations are less likely to bore you before the season is over, especially if they don't brown in the steam heat and drop needles and berries on the carpet.

Don't invite more guests than you can accommodate gracefully. Reserve eclectic tendencies for big parties. Invite only friends, neighbors, and family.

4. Take personal pleasure in your own hospitality.

Bring out and use all your household treasures, for you will find no more important time to be house-proud. Throw caution to the winds and use the finest linens, china, and crystal you own. There is no better reason for owning them. Keep the hearth fire burning steadily. Be careful to replace all candles when they begin to drip or decline. (Please turn the page)

continued

Take a moment before each new group of guests arrives to go through your rooms and see that everything is in order and pleasing. A house is never more endearing or rewarding than when it is shining and waiting for company.

Reserve at least half an hour during the day for privacy and rest. An exhausted or harried hostess can defeat her own plans.

Do not expect to achieve perfection. Greet mishap with philosophy and don't get in a flap if everything doesn't turn out just the way you planned it. It may turn out even better, as Christmas is the time for miracles. In any event, be flexible.

Entertain because you want to share your heart and home and to give pleasure, and not for any other reason.

Banish dull care, play, and make good cheer.

We wish you a merry morning, noon, and night. ■

The Taste of Splendor

Three magnificent menus from Dione Lucas's new cookbook

Indigenous to Christmas is the feast. It should be conceived with excitement, executed with affection, and served with elegance. To these things add the ingredients of imagination, quality (instead of quantity), and bold selection, flying in the face of tradition. The Christmas feast will achieve a new dimension. The three menus that follow are not based on recipes of such utter simplicity that you can produce them without paying attention. (Why should we tell you how to roast a turkey or mash turnips?) But they are planned with a manageable number of courses and made up of dishes that will neither strain the cook's capacity nor sate the diners. Each dish contributes to the harmonious whole—in flavor, texture, and visual appeal. And you are unlikely to find them at every party of the season.

Crème Olga

French soups in particular seem to be named after people—mistresses of kings, actresses, and occasional nonentities like Elisa or Miss Betsy and, in this case, Olga. Whoever Olga was, we can guess that she must have been boldly individualistic to have inspired a soup made of scallions and raw mushrooms. But she must also have been a gentlewoman of exquisite taste, for the soup turns out to be a subtle concoction daintily topped with a dollop of whipped cream sprinkled with cayenne. There are many attractive covered soup bowls on the market these days, and a table set with them for the first course would start any dinner party off handsomely. And nothing could be simpler as a first course.

Caneton à l'Orange

The rich, slightly gamy flavor of duck fairly cries out for a sauce that is both sweet and tart. That is why ducks and oranges seem to be meant for each other, and have long been served together by French chefs. However, French ducks differ in breed from their American cousins; there, duck is served somewhat underdone, with the breast meat still pink and the juices quite rosy. The orange sauce in this recipe takes care of what you might at first consider slightly raw duck, but if you don't care for it that way, roast your duck to a fare-thee-well. The sauce remains delicious even on a crisp duckling, though M. Escoffier would shudder at the thought.

Pommes de Terre à l'Orange

These potatoes are the ideal accompaniment for duckling with orange, but they are also good with baked ham or roast pork. I think it is important to introduce variations into your garnishes with main courses, and if you must have meat and potatoes, at least play it in as many different keys as possible.

Tarte aux Marrons

Like a good jazz musician, a chestnut can be either sweet or hot. Here we have puréed chestnuts making a rich and luscious butter cream whose sweetness combines with crunchy meringues. Meringues, made with beaten egg whites and sugar, are just about the simplest of all pastries. In Marie Antoinette's day, the meringues were simply shaped by spoon, spoons having been invented before pastry bags. You can do yours that way, too, if you can't handle a pastry bag.

This mousse, when it is served, has a certain distinction that ordinary icebox cake often lacks. It is the subtle difference, perhaps, between a chic Paris original and a little dressmaker's pretty frock. It isn't fussy, and the quality is superb. Decorating the buffet are HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's Three Kings (see page 169).

Coulibiac

• For a winter dinner party, this unusual dish is both hearty and elegant. It is made with a piece of roasted fillet of beef that is then encased in a shell of brioche dough. When you slice into what looks like a golden loaf of pastry, the center of each slice is a juicy rare circle of fillet. It is a veritable bull's-eye.

I once made a "poor man's Coulibiac" for friends of mine. Their faces fell when I brought out what was apparently just a hot loaf of white bread. But their spirits rose when I started to slice the bread, and each slice had a meaty interior of ground beef. You can make this same recipe substituting your favorite meat loaf for the fillet, and using white bread dough in place of the brioche dough. Rich man's or poor man's, Coulibiac, invented in wintry Russia, is a lovely dish for a cold night.

Salade d'Endive

In the United States, we sometimes call chicory "curly endive." The Belgian endive that is cultivated in the dark, somewhat like mushrooms, is a vegetable of quite a different color. It comes in short, tapered stalks, its smooth leaves tightly furled, its color a creamy white, shading to pale yellow at the tip. Crisp and not quite bitter, all it needs is a coating of French dressing and a sprinkle of freshly chopped parsley.

Mousse au Chocolat à la Normande

There is nothing more festive at the end of a meal than a beautifully molded dessert. This Norman chocolate mousse is really that old favorite chocolate icebox cake, with a French accent. Made in a charlotte mold—a deep tin or copper form with smooth, sloping sides—the dessert has a classic elegance as well as a delicious flavor.

This dinner begins in the living room (opposite) with fluffy cheese beignets as canapes. In dining room (above), the stuffed squabs are presented. Still to come is the strawberry mousse.

• If you make the pastry dough called pâté à choux, you have cream puffs; if you fry it in deep fat, you have beignets soufflés, and if you add cheese to the dough, you have a most delicious appetizer. Since each recipe varies a little, I'm giving you this one for beignets soufflés au fromage right from the beginning. You can make the dough in advance up to the point where you add the baking powder and egg white. That goes in just when you're ready to start frying these delectable puffs. Incidentally, if you make very small cheese beignets, the size of marbles, they are sensational as a hot canapé to serve with cocktails. And they take only the merest jiffy to fry.

A Delicate Dazzle

• Light is the personification of Christmas. In it reside the very semantics of the season—twinkle, glimmer, sparkle, glisten, radiance, glow—reflected in the eyes of childhood and the memories of man. Light displacing darkness, however limited the beam, is beacon, merrymaker, welcome-through-the-window. On all the boughs of Christmas we base intimate, small celebrations of the light that never was on land or sea. This year, How to Beautiful presents its own stellar collection of lights—the most effective we've seen in many years. More lights, next two pages.

Snowglobes, whitest of white spheres of glass fiber, "slipcover" conventional Christmas light bulbs with frosty, ice-palace enchantment. Ten globes in three sizes come with a string of ten white tree lights on a twelve-foot green vinyl wire. Wire gets so beautifully "lost" in greenery that trees, wreaths, doorway, and balustrade festoons seem miraculously punctuated with luminous, never-melting, fireproof snowballs. Snowglobes also come without lights, in boxes of twenty.

You can produce an angel an hour —every one a masterpiece

Make one golden angel or a whole choir—our directions (see page 30) are simple enough for mass production

• The adoring angels you see here (and on our cover) were designed for HOUSE BEAUTIFUL by two Californians, Jane Chapman and Alma Wright, who have enjoyed experimenting and creating with many materials over the years—from thread to sand casting. Their collective experience has prepared them for the development of the unusual but simple technique employed in these Christmas angels.

These graceful gold figures might well be the work of a master sculptor. Actually they are constructed in a very simple way from easily obtained materials. On page 30 we have set down the directions for making the angels and listed the materials you will need. We tell you how to make large and small angels, with a choice of headdresses. We tell how to achieve those heavenly draperies that look so rich and complicated but fall into place naturally with very little assistance from you—paste-soaked cotton fabric is simply slipped over a cardboard cone base. If you prefer your angels equipped for flight, you will also find patterns and instructions for making and attaching wings. ■

Enchanting ornaments you can make

• The glittering gold Pendant on this page and the vermeil-like Kings on the facing page are actually made of a heavy duplex paper backed with gold and faced either with more gold or with a jewel-like color. This merger of paper and foil has resulted in a material so flexible that it can be bent and shaped almost like sheets of beaten gold, yet it is strong and resilient enough to be used in paper sculptures such as these you can make yourself. The Pendant shown in our photograph is about three feet long, but you may wish to add more units for a tall room. You could try a swag of the center strip balls with a Pendant at each end, or you can utilize leftover scraps of the duplex paper to make multicolor-strip balls as decorations for your tree. The three Kings with their unique faces and dashing headgear are about 16″ tall and will continue to brighten your Christmas scene year after year. Both Kings and Pendant were designed by Phyllis Wallen for HOUSE BEAUTIFUL. You can put them together easily, using the patterns and instructions included in the kit described below. ■

The Come-One, Come-All Party

• Christmas is the time when no ordinary party will do. It is a time when families gather, clans converge, generations mix and mingle, and the possible guest list grows longer and longer. Christmas hospitality spreads its warm glow to rarely seen old friends and just-made new friends, to nodding acquaintances on the block and visitors from afar. A big party will bring everyone together. Friends are quickly made, and children feel more at ease with adults. But to make it something more than the typical cocktail party, you need an idea, a focus. Here are two thoughts—a skating carnival, and a home dance—but there are many others that may better fit your geographical and social climate.

A Skating Carnival

Skating is fun for those who skate and those who look on. Skating knows no age group, and Grandpa's swoops and glides may outshine Junior's. Sit-by-the-fires and people with colds can be encouraged to take up bridge or Scrabble indoors, but the ice will lure all hardy breeds.

You'll need all or most of the following for a skating carnival (see illustration at left):

- A frozen pond and a cold, starry night.
- An amplified record player or tape recorder with a selection of records or tapes, including numerous variations of the Skater's Waltz.
- An assortment of Hawaiian flares to light the scene.
- Seating arrangements with wool or fur robes or blankets for sitters-out.
- Continuous self-service of hot, hearty beverages on a long table decorated in Christmas colors, adjacent to your rink. Drinks should be kept bubbling in electrically heated containers.
- A hearty menu of simple food, also kept hot—Petite Marmite, chili, or a Brunswick stew is highly recommended.
- A big bonfire.
- A skating instructor to do figure-skating exhibitions, skate with the ladies, and tutor amateurs.
- A program of contests for the best figure skater, speed skater, most graceful couple, youngest, oldest, and so on.

The ice should be solid, smooth, and safe. Don't experiment or take chances with rotten ice anywhere on the pond. Shelter should be available nearby for sudden chills. Invitations should stress warm clothing. Indemnity insurance for one night is advisable if the crowd is very large. Do not give a skating party unless you or members of your family are winter sports enthusiasts. You will have to be continuously on the scene. Nonalcoholic beverages are best for mixed age groups, since it saves making two drinks. Suggested beverages: mulled grape juice, spiced cider, chocolate. An espresso machine will make a great hit. A skating carnival should start early and break up early.

A Home Dance

Although there are many cotillions, club dances, subscription dances, and charity balls around Christmas, nothing has the charm of a dance in your own home. Such a dance offers more fun and conviviality than a crowded cocktail party or any kind of public function. It takes the emphasis off mere refreshments, liquid or solid. All ages enjoy dancing, from the pre-teen, dancing-school child to the tired business man. People who don't dance enjoy hearing the music and watching others. There is an aura of glamour around a home dance that attends no other sort of party.

What you'll need for a home dance:

- A large room. Few houses now boast ballrooms, but most have a playroom, family room (Please turn to page 204)

If you can't be sure when guests will arrive, plan to serve only

Foods that hold well

By PAULA PECK

• From the cook's point of view, holiday entertaining has some handicaps that must be calculated. Guests are even less prompt than at other times of the year, what with snow storms, traffic jams, and their many other obligations. Then, too, the "open house" point of view seems to pervade all social affairs—the I'll-get-there-when-I-can attitude.

So the realistic hostess does her menu planning by checking the weather prediction and the calendar (for holiday traffic jams). She also weighs the social behavior of her guests: Will they be late for dinner because they've been to two or three other parties?

In considering which dishes can be held for at least an hour or two without losing flavor or texture, there are certain obvious foods to avoid. For example, steaks, roasts, or sautés, which need to be served pink or rare, should always be served as soon as possible after they are ready. Sea-food dishes, as well, get overcooked very easily. And vegetables go limp and soggy if held at low heat.

On the other hand, there is a whole category of foods that does not suffer for the keeping. Many of them, such as hearty soups and most braised meats, may actually improve and acquire a mellower flavor when held for an hour or two. The recipes below include the best of these. All of them can be kept up to several hours either in a low oven, over low heat on top of the stove, or on a warming tray. With the exception of the baked lamb and potatoes, they all take admirably to reheating.

French Boiled Dinner

This is a genuine party dish, though many people are not aware of it. When it is made and served properly, it is one of the most attractive and delicious dishes in the world. Fresh horseradish adds greatly to the flavor. Unfortunately it is not easily obtainable. I have come upon a way to zip up the taste of commercial horseradish. All Japanese grocery stores sell a green horseradish powder called wasabi. It only needs to be mixed with enough water to make a paste. If you have wasabi powder, make a paste of it and stir some into commercial horseradish. Add enough to suit your taste, for horseradish really should have some bite to it.

4 or 5 beef bones
4 celery pieces, with leaves
1 small bunch parsley
1 large onion salt
monosodium glutamate
6 beef consommé cubes
3 lbs. brisket of beef
1 medium-size cabbage
6 small zucchini
6 to 9 small potatoes
1 large turnip
6 leeks, trimmed and cleaned
1 can tiny carrots, drained horseradish

Place beef bones in a deep, heavy pot. Cover with cold water. Add celery, parsley, onion, salt, m.s.g., and the consommé cubes. Cook, uncovered, over high heat, till liquid has slightly reduced. Taste, and add more seasoning if necessary. Add brisket to boiling liquid. When liquid begins to boil again, cover pot and lower heat so that liquid is barely simmering. Simmer slowly about 2½ to 3 hours, or until meat is tender when pierced with a fork. Turn off heat and allow meat to stand in broth till serving time.

Cut the cabbage into small, even wedges and the zucchini into 1-inch slices. Scrub the potatoes and cut away a strip of skin from around the middle of each. Cut the turnip into ¼-inch slices, then cut into fancy shapes with a cooky cutter. Place each cleaned, trimmed vegetable, including leeks and carrots, in a separate small pot. Add salt and m.s.g. Ladle about a cup of your beef broth over each vegetable. Cook over medium heat till each vegetable is tender. Of course the carrots will already have been cooked, but recooking them in broth for a few minutes will give them extra flavor. Turn off heat under vegetables as they are ready, and allow them to stand in broth till serving time. They don't dry out, nor do they cook more.

To serve (and this is most important), slice meat evenly and arrange in the center of a large, hot platter. Arrange the hot vegetables around the meat, making separate bouquets of each kind. Serve with horseradish and coarse salt. The broth may be used as a first course (if served in bowls with the meat and vegetables. (Please turn to page 209)

BLANKET, FRENCH BLANKET CO. BED, BASSETT

and wonder

The delight of children in the familiar rituals of decorating and wrapping sets memory's train in motion

PHOTOGRAPHS BY BETTY KUHNER

The turbulent year draws to its restless close. Is it my age that makes my flexibility creak slightly at the knees? Is the new vocabulary as baffling as it sounds upon my ear? Are we a rootless people in an affluent civilization, with the family unit coming to its end? In the winds and tides of unremitting change, what spars can we cling to in this uneasy air? I look at the children and wonder.

It is too early to trim the tree, but the youngest cannot wait. Mark and Cynthia have tugged the scarred old toy chest up the cellar stairs, and Sally, in a moment of hysterical nostalgia, has dissevered herself from the telephone to protect her priorities. (Next year it may be too late for her, if she has managed to get a boy on the other end of the line.) Now they are digging in their tinseled treasures, arm-deep, to ferret out their special favorites, hallowed by time. They spill out the baubles—which I wrapped last year in solitude, for they are never about at dismantling time—and they bicker amiably while the floor is strewn with memory.

"Cindy, be careful. You're going to break my silver bird." Sally has reverted to childish possessiveness.

"It's mine, too."

"It is not. It's my own special one. It was on my first Christmas tree."

So it was, in that incredible one-room apartment, due to the housing shortage, not to mention the salary shortage. I got the tree at the dime store and there was barely room for it and us and the baby. I paid two dollars for that ridiculous bird, when we didn't really know where our next meal was coming from. I must have been mad.

Sally holds up the battered old thing with its draggled angel-hair tail, admiring it inordinately.

"It was on my tree too." Cindy insists stubbornly.

"You weren't even born!"

"Then where was I?"

"It was in the good old days before you were born." Mark says loftily.

"You weren't born either." Sally sniffs.

"I was born pretty soon." Mark says.

You certainly were, Mark-O. Almost too soon. Your first Christmas we had progressed to that tract house, surrounded by a sea of mud, in an effort to give the children advantages. There was a recession, I think. Anyway, I remember Bob's buying you an electric train before you were old enough to sit up, because you were a boy and he was a boy. But we needed a sofa and a rug and an ironing board and a mother's helper. I was so tired, but Bob was very good to me and when you howled one night, he got up and stumbled over the engine. He cracked his ankle and the engine was always lopsided after that.

"Where is the one that was on my first Christmas tree?" Cindy demands, elbowing her way between her two siblings.

"I don't remember." Sally says without looking up.

I remember. Everything was wonderful that year. We had already moved into this house and the tree was a really splendid affair. Cindy had a pram and a nurse and a fifteen-dollar angel replaced the mangy silver bird on the top of the tree. On Christmas morning, the angel was missing.

Forced to confession, Sally had stamped her feet and cried: "It got broken, and I flushed it down the toilet. It was ugly anyway, and I don't want to hear any more about it!"

So much for affluence.

Sally has put the bird in her hair and risen to admire herself in the Chippendale mirror. She's going to be a beautiful woman with a taste for glamour and excitement.

"I'm going to hang all the red ones." Mark announces. "Don't anybody touch them." He looks disappointed when we don't demur. Cindy tries to fasten a decoration in (Please turn to page 204)

About their parties... Children know best

Ask them where the real fun is. Kids can be brutally frank, but they're usually right, according to this roundup by House Beautiful's Family Editor

By MARYA SHEARER

• At Christmastime, a youngster's timid, hopeful request for a party is certain to cause a mother to grow pale.

At first, the prospect of giving a children's party on top of all the other holiday extras is too much for any parent to contemplate. On second thought, most mothers will agree that the Christmas season is for children. True, it is the time for attending religious services, seeing relatives, and observing time-honored traditions, but these may or may not send the children into raptures. If a party of their own will add to the youngsters' holiday happiness, a mother will usually say yes on the second, third, or fourth thought.

To my dismay, however, I have lately learned that not all children's parties are fun for the youngsters they're intended to please. The decorations may be clever, the food sensational, and the entertainment raucous, but the end result may not always measure up to expectations. Why? The children themselves don't always know. Fortunately, they do know when an affair is a success. For this reason, I have canvassed young friends of varying ages and compiled a dossier on the parties of Christmas-past that were, in their opinion, swinging.

The preschool and kindergarten set is not likely to set up a clamor for a party. They aren't wise in the ways of social activity. It was the older school children who told me what sort of things they loved when they were small. Most important was having a friend or two share the traditional, wonder-filled experiences that occur only at the holiday season. One favorite recollection was having a pal for lunch, skipping their naps, and going downtown to see the department-store window displays. Another happy memory was asking someone their own age for supper and then being driven around the neighborhood to see the lights and outdoor decorations.

In our part of the country, there are a number of traditional but rather professional programs geared to child audiences. Las Posadas, The Nutcracker Ballet, and a municipal park display of foreign Christmas trees and traditions are all fabulous and marvelously well-staged. Maybe there are similar special events in your area.

Beautiful as these theatrical treats are, I've found that the children quickly outgrow them. If a parent waits too long to take their toddlers to them, they may miss the boat. The youngsters soon become too sophisticated, too knowing for these fantasies, and once or twice is enough for them. In the main, these young and impressionable children appreciate the magic of Christmas when it's not pretentious, overstimulating, or out of their ken. They prefer to have it scaled down to fit their everyday lives. When it is shared with a friend it really becomes a Christmas party—in the children's estimation.

The next bunch of boys and girls I spoke to, the elementary-school group, prefer parties at which they do something. They don't care whether they are all-girl, all-boy, or mixed parties. It makes no difference, they tell me, so long as what they do is preceded or followed by a great deal of food.

They like skating parties, either on an indoor rink or an outdoor pond. They like sledding and snow parties. If the weather is right, they can be content for hours building forts from which to launch a snowball attack or, depending on the group's predilections, working on snow sculpture.

Another outdoor party, described to me by two young friends from Vancouver, sounds as if it's worth importing. They called it a "Camper Party." Every year, as soon as Christmas vacation starts, a few families with trailers, campers, or just station wagons (Please turn to page 211)

A recent party at the author's home was enlivened by tape recording interviews with the guests, impromptu songfests (left), and other highlights. Climax of the party was the playback (right). Tape will be replayed for years to come.

a sight-and-sound package of fun

To bring a great story alive for children, let them read it, hear it on a record, see it on a film. It can be done almost simultaneously

By EPSIE KINARD

• If you want to draw exultant whistles from a child on Christmas morning, give him a book he'll enjoy, and the same story on a record and a film.

It's thrilling for a child to have the characters in his book troop off the printed pages into the world of recorded sound (of pirate yells and threats, or Sherwood Forest vows, or Mad Hatter talk), and to see Jim Hawkins, Robin Hood, or Alice leap to giant-size on the screen in a big-as-life adventure.

Even the four-year-old can participate when he recognizes the ducklings (Make Way for Ducklings) waddle across Boston Common on the screen, and hear their quacks from the record player.

The pleasure children derive from such gifts is only one of the benefits. Parents may appreciate the educational value even more. One mother calls the book-record-film triangle her children's "private tutor," claiming it has taught them to learn faster and to read better. She says they've been able to recognize, grasp the meaning of, pronounce, and even use in a few weeks words it normally would take them months to master.

Since book, record, and film are not packaged together, how do you go about finding this gift? What titles are available? Buying the book and the record at local shops is no problem. Films are another matter. Renting them from your local camera store or by mail is the way to do it. The mail-order sources are well set up to do this—the film is returned in the same shipping box with a different label. For $2 to $60 for one showing, you can rent sound or silent 16-mm films (some in 8-mm) in color or black and white. They run from four to 130 minutes. Such films could be the exciting touchstone of a child's Christmas party. You can also buy films from your local camera shop.

If you live in their vicinity, you can often borrow films from film libraries at local colleges or universities. Many public libraries also have film rental facilities. Groups of libraries have banded together in film circuits to make many more films available.

Any child whose appetite for more audio-visual fun is whetted by your gift can continue to satisfy it on a borrower's card for films, records, and books and enjoy a deluxe system of learning that was unavailable 20 years ago.

As for available titles, there are around 75 for preschool to teenage that get full audio-visual treatment. (See page 205 for how to send for our "Selective List of Correlated Books, Records, and Films.")

Records? The best to buy for this audio-visual team are uncut versions of books, so that a child's ear can take in, word-for-word, what he reads. Look for full-length Audio Books on 16 rpm discs for these. Many companies record complete short stories. Edited (Please turn to page 205)

Cook It Way Ahead

These recipes will embellish any undauntable cook's repertoire. All keep for days or weeks, so make them in quantity. You may come to think of some as staples in your own arsenal of effective tricks

By PAULA PECK

• The recipes below have two things in common. One is that I wouldn't be without them. And second, I can prepare them at my leisure (which means other than at mealtime), for they keep for days, or weeks, and some even for months. Except for the honey cake, none is what you would call a menu item. They are mostly garnishes, side dishes, elevators of other dishes. Some get better as they stand.

With these recipes and a good stock of other, simpler keepables, you are ready to offer any dropper-in a hearty hors d'oeuvres platter plus dessert. Suggestions for other keepables: on the pantry shelf a jar of good, oil-covered olives; in the refrigerator a jar of home-roasted, spiced filberts and pecans, a crock of pâté covered with fat, vinaigrette dressing, home-pickled herring, home-potted cheese, and hard salami.

Here are my eight pets:

Salsa Fria

Salsa fria appears on almost every table in Mexico, in a side dish as an optional relish. It is delicious with all grilled meats or on crisp fried tortillas. It is also the key to making good guacamole (almost the national dish of Mexico), which is nothing more than coarsely chopped ripe avocados seasoned with salt into which two or three tablespoons of salsa fria have been stirred.

1 No. 2 can tomatoes
2 onions, minced
3 cloves garlic, minced
4 tbsp. wine vinegar
½ tsp. oregano
1 green pepper, minced
3 small hot peppers, minced (reduce amount if your family goes lightly on hot seasoning)
1 tsp. chopped cilantro (fresh coriander), if available
1 tsp. Tabasco sauce

Drain liquid from tomatoes. Then squeeze out excess liquid and seeds. This is important because if too watery from tomato juices, the vinegar will be diluted. Chop tomatoes coarsely. Add all remaining ingredients. Put into a clean quart jar and cover tightly. Store in refrigerator.

Sicilian Anchovy Peppers

This is a very old recipe from a little village in Sicily. It is traditionally made with hot peppers, but thin-skinned frying peppers may be substituted.

9 lbs. hot finger peppers or small frying peppers
2 lbs. firm, unsalty anchovies
1 qt. olive oil

Spread peppers on a large tray which has been lined with a towel. Allow to stand in a well-lighted place—in the sun, if possible—for about six days, or until peppers are slightly dry, wrinkled, and soft. Slit each pepper up one side. Remove seeds. Stuff one or two anchovies into each pepper.

Line all the anchovy-stuffed peppers into a strainer. Put a plate on top and press it down with something heavy—a stone, a weight, or whatever you have. Allow to drain overnight over a bowl which will catch the liquid. In the morning the peppers will be pressed and flat. Pack them into jars that have been previously sterilized in boiling water.

Heat olive oil to 300° on a fat thermometer. Ladle hot oil over peppers in jars, so that oil completely covers peppers. Cover tightly with clean lids. They will keep indefinitely at room temperature. Use one per person on an hors d'oeuvres plate, along with cherry tomatoes, prosciutto, salami, etc.

Middle Eastern Cheese Balls

These cheese balls may be made with all yogurt or all sour cream, but half and half improves the flavor. They keep for months in the refrigerator. When served with a crisp green salad, a slice of salami, a few black olives, and capers, a most satisfying hors d'oeuvres plate is the result.

1 pt. yogurt
1 tbsp. salt
1 tsp. freshly ground pepper
2 tsp. caraway seeds
olive oil

Line a strainer with a towel or with cheesecloth. Mix sour cream and yogurt together and pour into strainer. Place strainer over bowl, in refrigerator, for at least 36 hours, or till mixture is very firm and a good deal of liquid has drained into bowl. Discard liquid. Put firm mixture into bowl and add salt, pepper, and caraway seeds. Mix well. Return to cloth-lined strainer to permit further draining for at least 12 more hours.

Place contents of strainer into a pastry bag fitted with a large, plain round tube. (If this isn't available, the cheese bits can be shaped into rounds with two teaspoons.) Cover a cooky sheet lined with a towel or with a triple layer of cheese cloth. With the pastry bag and tube (or with two teaspoons) form small balls of the mixture on the cloth. The balls should be no larger than ⅔ inch in diameter. Cover the balls with another cloth and allow to stand at room temperature for at least 24 hours, or till they are firm enough to pick up with the fingers. Pack into a clean, pint-size jar. Add enough good olive oil to completely cover balls, then cover jar tightly and store in refrigerator till needed. If you wish to avoid olive oil for caloric or other reasons, the cheese balls may be packed into a clean jar and covered with a strong brine made by dissolving as much salt as possible in a cup of water.

Stage your own Festival

So many times during the holiday season it is appropriate to offer a cheering glass to guests. The choices are so numerous that it helps to have a policy. Why not, this year, serve nothing but the many admirable American wines?

This list of 29 American wines was chosen for the American restaurant in the American Gas Pavilion at the World's Fair called "Festival '64." It was operated for AGA by Restaurant Associates, which also runs such New York gourmet establishments as The Four Seasons, The Forum, La Fonda del Sol, The Hemisphere Club, and The Tower Suite. This wine list was chosen by committee, members being key executives of Restaurant Associates, all very knowledgeable people.

In HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's eyes they achieved a distinguished list, including most of the best American wines that are readily available. It would be a perfect list from which to select domestic wines in stocking your own cellar. If we had been on the committee, we might have added Widmer's robust "Auslese Reisling" and Louis Martini's delicate "Amabile." They may not be available to you, the consumer, in all regions. But they are worth trying to buy. We wish you a Happy Festival!

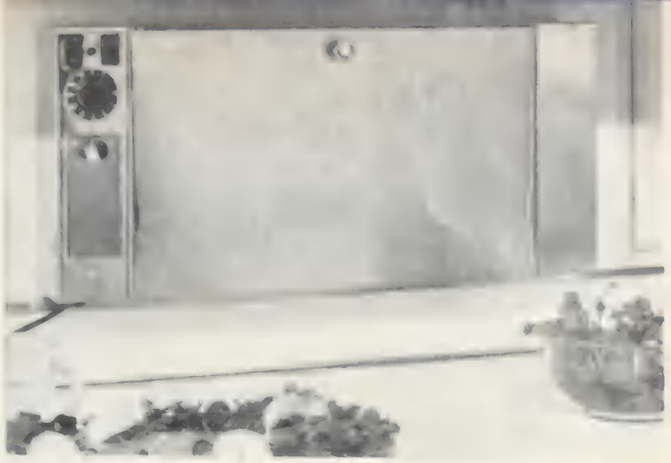
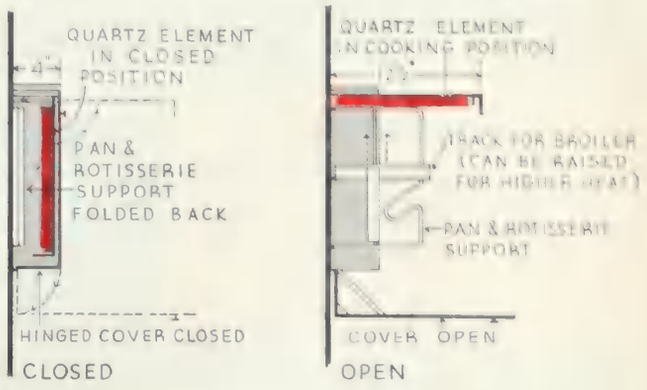
You can use this portable stainless-steel and ceramic broiler-grill anywhere indoors or outdoors, for it operates on a 1-lb. cylinder of propane gas. A Pyroceram burner radiates intense infrared heat instantly, so food cooks quickly and without dehydrating. Smokeless, it can literally be wiped clean. Corning Cercor broiler-grill, about $60; with rotisserie, $75.

The new, quicker-cooking heat



It's really heat-light, and it travels in a straight line in the same way as visible light. It can be refracted or reflected, and passes through transparent objects such as air or glass without being absorbed. It's a wonder —mainly because it shortens cooking time

• Whether you are a hostess in a hurry or a working person anxious to get a meal on the table in the shortest possible time, you should know about infrared heat for cooking. It could revolutionize your cooking habits, and it will definitely improve the taste and succulence of what you cook.



Infrared heat in the kitchen is not new. This type of energy has been used in kitchens for 15 years for warming food. And it has been used in restaurant kitchens for cooking for 10 years. But only in the last 24 months has it come to the home kitchen and the patio. It is a real contribution.

If you are skeptical of claims about faster cooking, let us say this is no electronic oven, which was faster but so fast it threw everything we knew about cooking out of whack. Infrared heat is 25 percent to 50 percent faster than the conventional heat we now use. The variation in speed-up depends on the foodstuff being cooked and the size of the pieces: in short, the volume and density of the food.

For instance, experiments have shown that an infrared oven can bake a yellow layer cake in 12 minutes, half the time required in a regular oven. Fifteen minutes can be cut from the time needed to bake pumpkin or custard pie. Meat loaf can be cooked in 40 minutes, compared with 60 minutes in a regular range. But where infrared cooking really shines today is in broiling. Here its speed is not so outstanding—being only 20 percent to 30 percent faster. But it produces a more succulent, less shrunken piece of meat. Six manufacturers now make infrared broiler-ovens. Several portable infrared broilers are fired by butane cylinders. One electric model is made for portable or built-in use. See data with photographs

You can have an infrared broiler in the gas range shown is a 30" two-oven range with a super-fast Microflex burner for fast broiling, as one of two burners in the eye-level oven. This also speeds preheating, used in conjunction with the bake-burner. Hardwick MicroRay Debutante range, about $330. Others with infrared broilers: Magic Chef, Caloric, Norge, Tappan, Modern Maid. An electric unit is made by Clark Industries.

Soft pad, cane back, and graceful arms make this sturdy settee an irresistible place to rest a moment or leave your things. And it takes less than four feet of wall. By Thomasville Furniture.

"Won't you rest your wraps here?"

—say these inviting hall settees

On these full-fledged sitting spaces, you can put down a package or put on a boot.

They work hard for your family all week but are ready to welcome guests at party time

The boldness of a design like this black-and-white hound's-tooth check can put spark into a dull hallway. Airy design of sides, repeated across settee's back, keeps it light in scale. Made by Globe, available at W. & J. Sloane. Moresque vinyl tile, Robbins.

This sophisticated love seat, with its simple, sleek lines, has comfortable-looking loose cushions to offer a subtle invitation. Though longer than others shown on these pages, it's still only 26" deep, advantageous in a narrow hallway. Made by Erwin Lambeth, it's available at John Stuart through decorators.

A touch of whimsey and fun in the design of this love seat make it a cheerful way to say welcome or good-by. If furniture can be friendly, this is it. Frame is fruitwood and cane, with buttoned cushion resting on woven rush seat. From Chateau Collection by Thomasville Furn.

A variety of unexpected seating places is important in any home. This fully upholstered love seat by Heritage is unusual because of its small scale. It offers all the comfort of a sofa, but is more adaptable. The slight flare of its arms and its luxuriously deep tufting add much to its comfort and style.

The perfect season for sound on tape

With a tape recorder you can capture the excitement of the holidays, create your own musical programs, or listen to prerecorded tapes. Never before has the equipment been so versatile and so easy to use—as the pictures show

By CARROLL C. CALKINS

• The essential magic of the tape recorder has long been at hand. We can use it to preserve sound of any kind, store the sound for as long as we wish, and bring it back to life at the turn of a reel. This was also true 66 years ago, when the Danish inventor, V. Poulsen, first put sound on magnetized wire.

But meanwhile, back at the laboratory, the never-ending quest of inventors and technicians led to gradual improvement in every facet of the process. And therein lies a factor that has kept the tape recorder from realizing its full potential as a contributor to our way of life.

Although the total effect of the improvements makes the tape recorder dramatically superior to the machine of, say, ten years ago, the changes were made so gradually as to go almost unnoticed by the public at large. But now, added to this cumulative effect of gradual improvement are some dramatic new developments that give just cause, at this holiday season, for rejoicing about the future of tape for home entertainment.

The new improvements have to do with easier operation. This is exactly what is needed to encourage the wider use of tape. The new machine shown in the picture above has an automatic threading device that neatly engages the loose end of tape without any fuss or fumbling. This model also has an automatic reverse. After threading, it plays through in the usual way to the end of the reel, then reverses itself and plays the second stereo channel. Reversing is manual, or triggered by a subsonic signal that can be put anywhere on the tape. The machine will continue to play back and forth until it is stopped.

Another convenience, shown on the facing page, is a machine that plays a stack of cartridges as easily as a record changer plays a stack of records. It automatically plays, rewinds, and rejects each cartridge in turn. It holds a stack of 20 cartridges, which will give you 15 hours of uninterrupted stereophonic sound.

Tape-recorder manufacturers have been slow to solve the problems of threading the tape. They have, quite understandably, been reluctant to think of this as a problem. But many people (this writer included), who consider themselves reasonably well coordinated, have been reduced to frustration in the effort to engage a limp and elusive strand of quarter-inch tape in the slot of an unyielding empty reel.

In addition to the new machines mentioned above, the 3-M Company has come up with a self-threading reel. The end of the tape is dropped down into the reel where a tapered flange wedges it tight and starts pulling it through.

There's a lot to be said about tape recorders—starting with the fact that the name is misleading. It tells but half the story. They will, of course, record any sounds with facility and fidelity. But they also play back that sound—as well as other sounds recorded for their use. Actually, they are recorder-players.

The library of prerecorded tapes available today is upwards of 2,500 different reels. While this is not a large figure compared to the 25,000 titles available on phonograph records, the selection includes all categories—classical, operatic, popular, jazz, spoken word, collections, and musical shows. And, of course, anything on the air, on record, or in live performance can be put on tape if you have a recorder.

You can get a "tape deck" that includes only the transport mechanism, controls, recording head and a special preamplifier. In order to operate, it must be connected to an existing hi-fi amplifier, and to be heard there must be a speaker system. If you already have a good high-fidelity playback system, this is the best way to get into tape recording-playing.

You can also get self-contained tape recorder-players with the amplifiers and speakers built in. Because of the limitation in speaker size, the quality of sound is limited.

The best of the tape machines are of the type shown here. They have built-in amplifiers and separate speakers of high quality. Most manufacturers make units in all three of these categories.

You can get a good tape deck for under $200; a high quality all-in-one unit in the $200-to-$400 range; and an excellent machine with external high-fidelity speakers for $500 and up. These figures are approximate but will give you an idea of the overall range.

Prices vary considerably, according to the features available and whether the units are monophonic or stereo. When you begin to shop, you'll find that there are more than enough makes from which to choose.

It pays to do a good bit of shopping and listening before you buy. Although the machines have been greatly improved in recent years, they are intricately made and close tolerances must be maintained for dependable performance. As with most things, you can expect to get about what you pay for.

There are a number of small portable self-contained tape recorders in the $50-to-$100 range, some of which are battery operated. The quality of these, in most cases, is such that they are best used only for the spoken word. They are wonderfully convenient for making verbal notes, taking interviews and such. But they are not meant for music and home entertainment.

Let us say, then, that you have a stereo tape machine of good quality. How can you put it to work? One immediate, easy and rewarding enterprise is to record some of the excellent music played on quality FM radio stations. Many of the "good music" stations publish programs in advance. With these you can plan your taping ahead of time. Otherwise just set the machine and be ready to switch it on when something you want is announced. If you have a stereo machine, you can record FM stereo on tape.

Those who have some favorite old 78-rpm discs might like to tape a nostalgic selection of favorite sides to be played at length without damage to the records. It is a great advantage to be able to take just one piece of an LP disc, or one side of a 78, and string them together on tape in whatever arrangement you like. Further on, we will suggest some special ways to use this idea for holiday parties.

Most high-quality machines can record "sound on sound." This means you can add a track of sound to one already recorded. Thus you can enjoy such delights as playing a piece on the piano and then accompanying yourself on the drums. Or you might like to play the harmonica and sing along with it. You'll find this difficult to do in any other way.

You can also record from a disc, or off the air, and then add your own accompaniment on another track. With this feature, almost anything you want to hear can be recorded.

One of the most popular uses of the tape recorder—at least when you first get one—is for informal recording of readings, conversation, group singing, or amateur musical and theatrical performance. The fun of it is in the doing, and hearing one or two playbacks. For an interesting version of informal party use, see the story "About Their Parties, Children Know Best" on page 176. On tape there's no such thing as waste. When you tire of what you have, you simply record right over it. The machine erases as it goes.

Tape cartridges, stacked 20 high, can play 15 hours. Sound quality is good at a tape speed of only 1⅞ ips. Machine automatically threads, rewinds, and rejects—or rejects without playing. Some 300 prerecorded cartridges are available, and more coming. About $450 complete. Revere-Wollensak Div. of 3-M. amplifiers, speakers, and microphones may also be used as small-scale public address systems. You may also plug in a record changer, if it has a pre-amp, and play phonograph records through the amplifier and speaker system of any complete tape machine.

In shopping for a tape recorder, you will hear a lot of talk about tape speed. This is figured in inches per second, and referred to as ips. To make sense of the talk you'll hear, you should know the following:

For optimum quality of sound on tape, a speed of 15 ips is required. This is the speed at which original performances are recorded to be later put on phonograph records. Until recently, a speed of 7½ ips was required to provide quality sound (good enough for reproduction of music) on non-professional tape machines. New improvements in magnetic tape now make it possible to get excellent reproduction at a speed of 3¾ ips. The minimum speed for music reproduction is now down to 1⅞ ips. This is the speed of the Revere-Wollensak cartridge machine. Until now, this speed was considered adequate only for reproduction of the spoken word. On some machines, the spoken word can now be taped at a speed of 15/16 ips for even longer play.

Reducing the speed of the tape, while keeping the quality of sound, is all-important to the future of the medium. Each time you halve the speed, you double the amount of material that can go on a given length of tape and, in effect, reduce the cost by half.

These are the means by which tape is beginning to compete with records in cost, although records still have a considerable edge. As of now, a given amount of music costs about 10 to 30 percent more on tape than on record. Keep in mind, however, that playback is only one of the aspects of a recorder-player. It also has the unique attribute of remembering everything it hears.

Tape has some other advantages, too. It is far less susceptible to wear than records. You can play a tape more than 1,000 times on a good machine without significant wear. Tape has a higher potential for quality than records. Whether or not this advantage is realized depends upon the speed at which the tape runs and the quality of the machine. But the salesman will tell you that the potential is there —and he's absolutely right. (Please turn to page 205)

Are your luke-warm pancakes giving your husband good reasons to pick on you?

There are five people waiting at the table. There is only one of you making the pancakes. Everybody wants to eat pancakes at once. You put them on a tray. But it's not Hotray®. You bring the tray to the table. By the time all the pancakes are finished, they're all luke-warm. Cold butter can't melt on lukewarm pancakes. The kids don't say a thing but your husband takes this opportunity to say some choice little thing that makes you feel "not nice", like: "Can't we all have hot pancakes at the same time?".

Precisely why Hotray was created so you could get everything from pancakes to shish kebab on the table for two, five or twelve people or more, at eating temperature. It's hard for anybody to pick on you (even a husband of long standing) when you have Hotray on your side. Get Hotray, and let your husband struggle to find something new to pick on you for.

Hotray models available from $5.95 to $59.50. For handsome free recipe booklet write to Salton Inc., 515 East 72nd St., N.Y. 21, N.Y. Available at these fine stores in U.S.A. and Canada: Hammacher Schlemmer, New York; John Wanamaker, Philadelphia; Rich's, Atlanta; The Emporium, San Francisco.

or some area, such as a very large foyer, which can be cleared of furniture. An enclosed, unheated porch or a tented terrace will serve in some climates. A garage, in which a dance floor has been laid or the concrete waxed, can be a very satisfactory place for a dance, if you exercise a little talent in decoration. A large living room can be cleared for dancing, but don't involve the dining room.

• Music. This can range from a professional combo to a schoolboy musical aggregation. These groups usually play excellent dance music. Discotheque-type music can be provided by a record player with an automatic changer that plays up to twelve records unattended, or a tape recorder with tapes of records made in advance. (Tape recorders can be rented from regular rental services if you don't have one.) Music should be virtually continuous for the true discotheque effect. Selections should cater to both conservative dance tastes—fox trot, waltz, rumba—and the fad dances favored by the young, such as the frug and the mashed potato, to give both groups a breather.

• A place to sit. Not everybody will be dancing all the time, so you will need to arrange for seating in quieter areas of the house. If the dining room is sufficiently large, small tables with chairs can be set up there. An extra bar in a library or study will be a convenience for those determined to converse.

• Food and drink. Nonalcoholic punch or soft drinks for the young. Regular bar service for adults. The college-age group usually favors beer. Food is a must, since exercise spurs the appetite. Popcorn, peanuts, potato chips, and other snacks should be available all evening. Supper should be hot and hearty—lasange or Swedish meatballs, chicken à la king, or scrambled eggs and sausages are good.

• Decorations. Spend your energy on the dining room. If you use small tables, they can be treated with floor-length circular table covers in felt, washable cotton velvet, polished cotton, Mexican cotton or ticking, decorated with tassels, fringe, or braid. The tables can be centered with a candlestick, gilt angel, spun-glass balls, a Christmas tree, or an arrangement of red apples. Tablecloths, for one occasion only, can be made of spangled net or sequinned tarleton, available in the stores around Christmas. All other decorations should be high, so as not to interfere with the dancers. A decorated chandelier, kissing ball, or mistletoe bough tied with red velvet ribbons are indicated. Keep blazing candles away from the dance floor.

Extra added attraction

• A professional dance instructor from one of the big studios to teach the new fad dances, arrange grand march, cotillion, Paul Jones, or other mixers. Such an instructor can be obtained for a minimal cost and will also serve as the disc jockey. He will stimulate dancing.

• Dance contests with bottles of Champagne as prizes.

• Some good voices among the guests to start singing at the end of the evening.

• A loyal gentleman friend who will keep an eye out for wallflowers and give them a whirl.

• Your own personal enthusiasm. It is as important to have a ball as to give one. ■

I remember standing beside my own mother, hanging paper chains and strung popcorn of my depression childhood on the scraggly cedar. We had half a dozen beloved spun-glass balls my mother refurbished annually with our names in cake icing. She loved what was beautiful and bright. Sally reminds me of her.

I don't remember having much or little. I only remember being happy and safe while the Christmas bells glimmered above me in the peaceful air. I can't tell you how many times of life and love, birth and death I have forgotten since having children of my own.

Now these frail symbols, destined to shatter at the slightest touch, seem most unlikely to be spars in a tough, sea. On the other hand, everything changes but the human heart. ■

One Gift Works Many Wonders

This youngster represents the millions helped each year by agencies and services of your United Campaign. He is a symbol of their hope, their need, their gratitude. And he reminds us of the work yet to be done: Of homeless children who crave love, elderly who seek dignity and fulfillment; of handicapped who want a chance to help themselves, families that need guidance; of the sick who must be healed. When you think about it, the United Way poster boy is really our conscience. How can we deny him?

A company making both records and films of top quality picture books is Weston Woods Studio, Weston, Conn. Record and film follow faithfully such beloved stories as Millions of Cats, Lentil, The Five Chinese Brothers, and Caps for Sale.

The technique used by producer Morton Schindel for making sound films turns out beautiful and sensitive films. He moves his camera over a picture page to give the illusion of motion, as if the book were coming alive. He tries to avoid the effect of phony animation seen in many cartoons. To the narrator's voice, he adds sound effects (only to support atmosphere) and original music to communicate color and tempo.

The "moving still" with sound is another technique to put photographic stills into motion with a camera. It is used by Marvin Lichtner for Margin Productions for filming such classics as A Child's Christmas in Wales.

Lifelike silhouettes, cut freehand with scissors and moved like puppets, is another technique used. It suggests a Chinese shadow-box play. The German artist, Lotte Reiniger, uses it to make charm-piece sound films like Thumbelina and The Gallant Little Tailor for Primrose Productions.

Besides silhouettes, performers for children's movies include live animals (Le Lièvre et La Tortue), animated cartoons (Gulliver's Travels), Hollywood actors (used for various classics), and puppets (The Emperor's Nightingale). ■

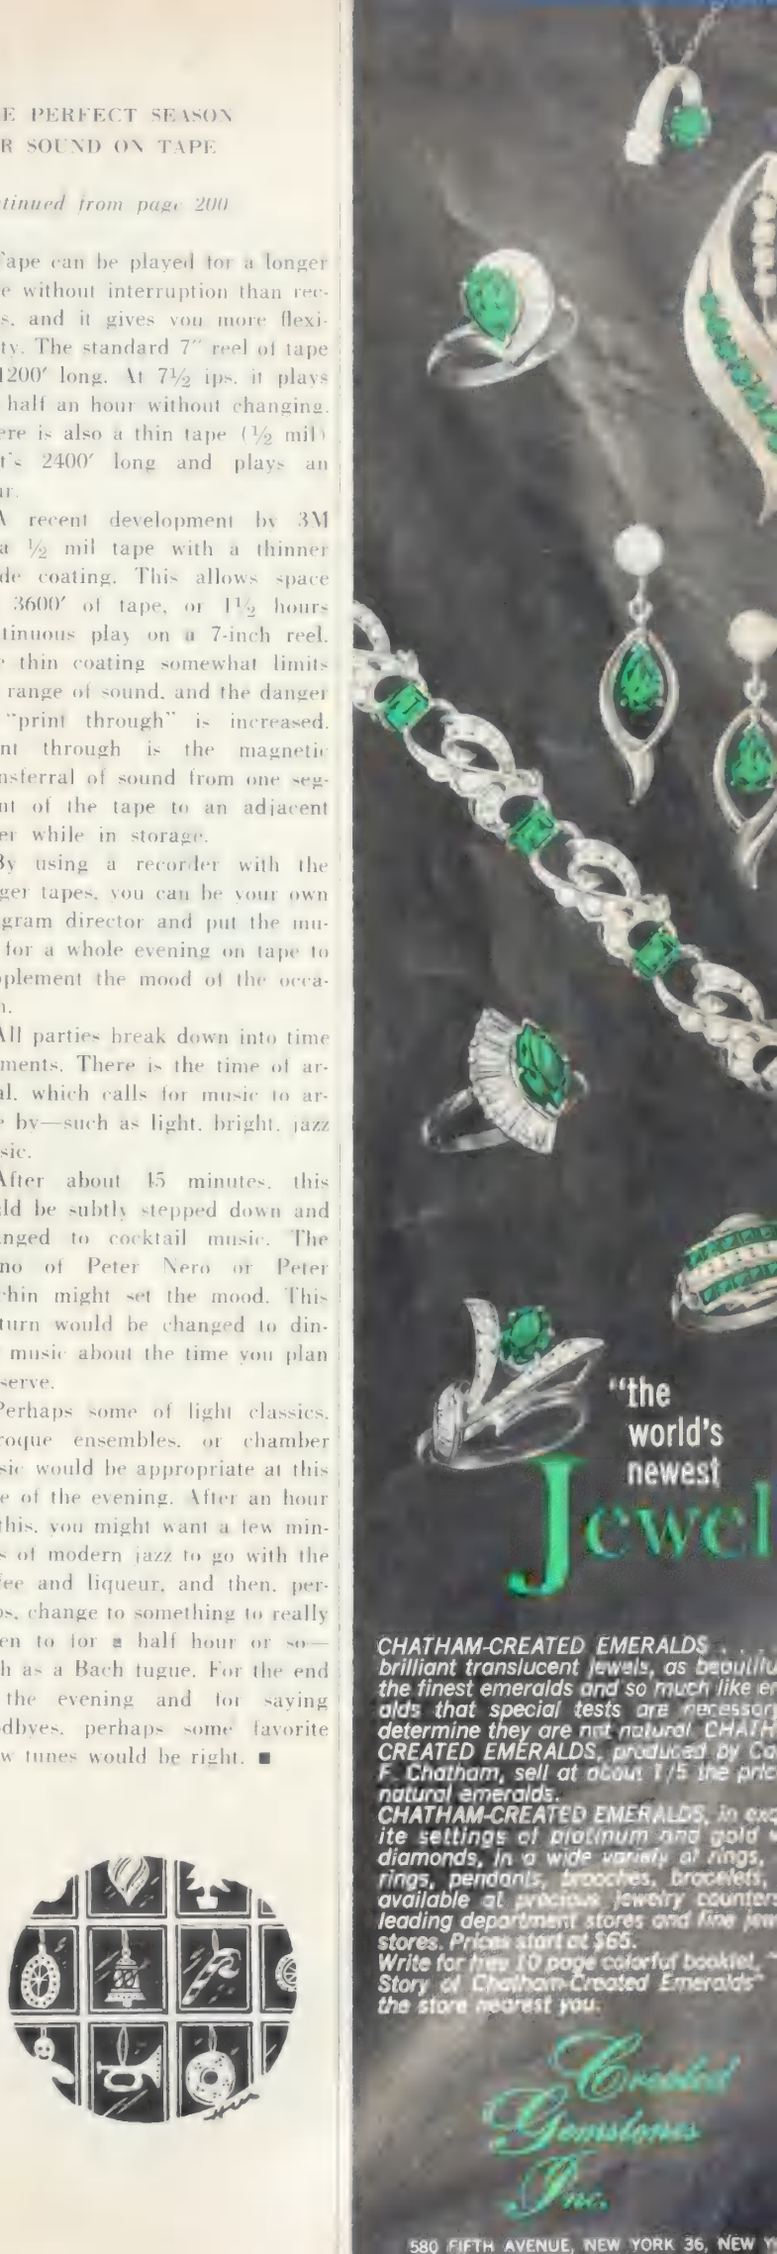
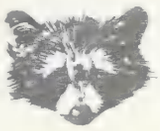
Tape can be played for a longer time without interruption than records, and it gives you more flexibility. The standard 7" reel of tape is 1200' long. At 7½ ips, it plays for half an hour without changing. There is also a thin tape (½ mil) that's 2400' long and plays an hour.



A recent development by 3M is a ½ mil tape with a thinner oxide coating. This allows space for 3600' of tape, or 1½ hours continuous play on a 7-inch reel. The thin coating somewhat limits the range of sound, and the danger of "print through" is increased. Print through is the magnetic transferral of sound from one segment of the tape to an adjacent layer while in storage.

By using a recorder with the longer tapes, you can be your own program director and put the music for a whole evening on tape to supplement the mood of the occasion.



All parties break down into time segments. There is the time of arrival, which calls for music to arrive by—such as light, bright, jazz music.

After about 45 minutes, this could be subtly stepped down and changed to cocktail music. The piano of Peter Nero or Peter Duchin might set the mood. This in turn would be changed to dinner music about the time you plan to serve.

Perhaps some of light classics, Baroque ensembles, or chamber music would be appropriate at this time of the evening. After an hour of this, you might want a few minutes of modern jazz to go with the coffee and liqueur, and then, perhaps, change to something to really listen to for a half hour or so—such as a Bach fugue. For the end of the evening and for saying goodbyes, perhaps some favorite show tunes would be right. ■ to find such small ones here, and squabs make an even more delicious substitute. One of the great nuisances about eating squab is the dozens of tiny bones you must contend with for every morsel of flesh you get. But in this recipe the squab is boned, and then stuffed with a meaty dressing that supplements as well as complements its own not-too-plentiful flesh. Another advantage is that a great part of the work can be done in advance—the day before, if you wish.

Epinards à la Hambourg

This is the classic vegetable accompaniment for the stuffed squabs à la Hambourg, and it was always served with it there. In this country, where spinach is hardly one of the best beloved of vegetables, it seems strange to some people to find it paired off with a delicacy like squab. I can only ask that you try it this way and see if it, too, isn't a delicacy.

Fresh Strawberry Mousse

This is a most delicate light dessert, which can be prepared well in advance and is ready to serve straight out of the refrigerator. You can vary it by substituting raspberry, apricot, peach, or other fruit pulp.

Following are the recipes for Magnificent Menu Number Three.

Beignets Soufflés au Fromage
(Cheese Fritters)

Serves 6 as first course, more as canapés

salt butter
eggs
Parmesan cheese
Dijon mustard
dry mustard
cayenne pepper
vegetable oil

1. In a heavy pan put 1 cup of cold water, 8 tablespoons (4 ounces—1 stick) of butter, cut into pieces.
2. Stir with a wooden spoon until the butter is dissolved and the liquid reaches a rolling boil. Don't let it boil for any time, as there will be evaporation.
3. Immediately throw in, all at once, 1 cup of flour.
4. Lower the heat and stir with a wooden spoon until the mixture comes away from the sides of the pan and forms a large ball.
5. Place the ball of dough in a mixer bowl.
6. Beat in, one at a time, 4 eggs (be sure each egg is well mixed before adding the next one).
7. Add, still beating, ¼ teaspoon of salt, a dash of cayenne, ½ teaspoon of dry mustard, 2 level teaspoons of Dijon mustard, 1 scant cup of freshly grated Parmesan cheese.
8. At this point, you can store the pastry (pâté à choux) in a covered bowl in the refrigerator until you are ready to use it. If you do, let the bowl stand at room temperature for at least an hour before frying the beignets.

1. In a deep-fat fryer heat vegetable shortening or vegetable oil to a depth of about 2½ to 3 inches.
2. Using a fat thermometer (the same as a candy thermometer) let the fat heat to 350°.
3. Then form the mixture into small balls, using two teaspoons. (If you are making canapés, use a demitasse spoon to get them marble-sized.)
4. Keeping the beignets as round as possible, push them off one spoon with the other into the hot fat. Fry just a few at a time.
5. The beignets will roll over by themselves when the bottoms get golden brown.
6. Wait until the beignets are golden brown all over before removing them with a slotted spoon. If you take them out too soon they will collapse. Otherwise they will puff up to 2 or 3 times their size, and will stay that way.
7. Drain the browned beignets well on paper towels.
8. Sprinkle them with grated Parmesan cheese.

Serve them on a starched napkin and sprinkle with a little more grated cheese. (This absorbs any remaining fat, yet the starched cloth will not become limp and greasy.)

Petits Poussins à la Hambourg
(Stuffed Squab as done in Hamburg)

Serves 6

6 squabs (have your butcher split the skin down the back of each and remove ribs, breastbone, and backbone, leaving thigh and wing bones in) 12 chicken livers
salt butter
Calvados
white peppercorns

mushrooms
lemon
6 oz. cooked tongue pistachio nuts
3 green apples
flour
granulated sugar
heavy cream
truffles
fresh tarragon

If your butcher cannot bone your squabs for you, you can do it yourself with a little care (and a little luck the first time). Take your boning knife and slit the skin of each squab down the back. Cut skin and flesh carefully away from the spine, ribs, and breastbone so that you can free the carcass skeleton, leaving the whole skin with the breast and other meat, lying flat. Leave the wing bones and thigh bones intact. Reserve the carcass bones. (If your butcher does this job for you, be sure to have him send you the bones he removes.)

Season the inside of each squab with a little salt and freshly ground white pepper.

1. Now in a sauté pan, brown 12 chicken livers and the squab livers in 2 tablespoons of very hot butter.
2. Flame with 6 tablespoons of Calvados.
3. Remove the livers and add to the pan 6 tablespoons (3 ounces—¾ stick) of butter.
4. When hot, add 12 sliced mushrooms, ¼ teaspoon of finely chopped garlic.
5. Cook briskly for 2 minutes with 1½ teaspoons of lemon juice, salt, pepper.
6. Add 6 ounces of shredded cooked tongue, 3 tablespoons of blanched pistachio nuts, and the livers, carefully sliced.

1. Skin, core and slice 3 green apples. (Slices should be small and about ¼ inch thick.)
2. Dry slices thoroughly on paper towels.
3. Dust them with flour.
4. Sauté the apple in hot butter and a little sugar—but don't let the slices get too soft.

1. Mix with the other ingredients, and mound up on each squab for stuffing. (The boned squabs will be lying flat and spread-eagled on your board.)
2. Shape the squabs around the stuffing and sew them up carefully, making sure that the skin is securely closed and there are no openings out of which the stuffing can pop while the birds are cooking.
3. Turn each squab on its back, and tie each with fine string. (At this point you can refrigerate the squabs and cook them later, or you can go for broke and finish up the recipe in one fell swoop.)
4. Put in a heavy sauté pan 8 tablespoons (4 ounces—1 stick) of salt butter. When it is hot, put in the squabs. Brown them slowly with the lid on, turning them so they brown all over.
5. Flame with ¾ cup of Calvados.
6. Place the bony carcasses alongside the birds.
7. Set the pan, uncovered, on the top shelf of a preheated 375° oven for 15 to 50 minutes.
8. Baste twice, adding one or more tablespoons of Calvados each time, if necessary.
9. Turn the birds once or twice, using a wooden spoon.
10. When cooked, remove squabs from the pan, remove the string used in trussing, discard bones. Carefully stir into the pan gravy—a tablespoon at a time, beating it in with a wire whisk—2 cups of lightly whipped heavy cream.
11. Add 2 tablespoons of finely chopped truffle, 2 tablespoons of finely chopped fresh tarragon (if you cannot get fresh tarragon, hydrate the dried herb in a little warm water before using).

To do them full justice, the squabs ought to be served in a little copper casserole with the sauce spooned over them. But earthenware will do nicely. This lily needs no gilding.

Epinards à la Hambourg
(Spinach with Mornay Sauce)

Serves 6

3 packages of frozen spinach (or 3 pounds of raw spinach)
salt butter
¾ cup small fried croutons
flour
cayenne pepper
dry mustard
Dijon mustard
milk
light cream

1. Put 3 packages of frozen spinach in a pan with a sprinkling of water and a little salt.
2. Cook until spinach is just soft. Do not overcook.
3. Drain thoroughly in a colander with a plate on top of the spinach and a weight (a brick neatly covered in foil is good) on the plate. Press out all moisture.
4. Put spinach through meat chopper with fine blade.
5. Mix in 2 tablespoons (1 ounce—¼ stick) of melted butter and ¾ cup of small fried croutons. (Do not add the croutons until you are ready to serve up the spinach. They are the "difference" in this dish. Their crisp contrast with the soft vegetable is what turns the trick. If they are imbedded in the chopped spinach for too long a time, they will become soggy and you will end up with just plain garden-variety you-know-what.)

A SUPERB CREATION

6. Form the spinach-and-crouton mixture into large egg shapes by molding it with two tablespoons.

Arrange "eggs" in rows on a buttered au gratin dish and top each with a tablespoon of the following Mornay sauce:

1. Melt in a small pan 2 good tablespoons (1 ounce—¼ stick) of butter.
2. Stir in off the fire, 3 tablespoons of flour. Season with salt and cayenne pepper, ¼ teaspoon of dry mustard, ½ teaspoon of Dijon mustard.
3. Mix in, still off the fire, 1 scant cup of milk.
4. Stir over the fire until it just comes to a boil.
5. Then add ¼ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese, 3 tablespoons of light cream.
6. Simmer for a few minutes.
7. Coat the spinach "eggs" with this sauce.

Sprinkle the top with a little more cheese and a little melted butter. Brown under the broiler.

Eat it and weep—for all the wasted years when you thought spinach was a horrid dish.

Fresh Strawberry Mousse

eggs
granulated sugar
confectioners' sugar
2 boxes of strawberries
2½ cups of heavy cream fresh vanilla bean plain gelatine
lemon raspberry liqueur (framboise)
red currant jelly

1. Put into a mixing machine bowl 5 whole eggs and 4 egg yolks, 4 rounded tablespoons of granulated sugar.
2. Beat until mixture thickens and holds its shape. This is one thing you need not fear overbeating. While the machine works away, you can do the rest.

Purée 2 boxes of strawberries. Save 12 of the prettiest to use as decoration later. Hull the rest and put them in blender. This will give you 2 cups of fresh strawberry purée.

1. Put 2½ cups of heavy cream in a metal bowl over another bowl of ice.
2. Beat with large wire whisk until it begins to thicken.
3. Add 2 inches of scraped fresh vanilla bean, 2 heaping tablespoons of confectioners' sugar.
4. Continue beating until cream holds its shape.

1. Put 2¼ packages of plain gelatine in a small pan.
2. Add 2 tablespoons of lemon juice and 6 tablespoons of water.
3. Stir over a very slow fire until the gelatine dissolves. Use a metal spoon, and you can see at once when the gelatine is completely dissolved and there are no more crystals.

1. Then, remove egg mousse from the machine and stir the strawberry purée into it with a rubber scraper. (If you mixed them together by machine you would break down the egg mousse too much.)
2. Carefully fold in ¾ of the whipped cream. Add 3 or 4 tablespoons of raspberry liqueur (framboise).
3. Lastly—and this is the really tricky bit, because if you're not very careful, your gelatine will set in layers in the mousse—carefully and thoroughly stir in the gelatine. You want to be sure to wait until the gelatine is about the same temperature as the mousse for best and smoothest results.

Now pour your mousse into a beautiful bowl—a shallow crystal bowl is perfect if you have one—and put it in the refrigerator to set. When it is set, decorate around the edges with the whole strawberries you saved. Brush them with a little red currant jelly which has been dissolved over a slow fire with 2 tablespoons of framboisse, strained, and cooled. Decorate the center with the rest of the whipped cream piped through a pastry tube.

A fitting finale for a beautiful meal. ■

Beef à la Bucheronne

6 lbs. cabbage
½ lb. salt pork, cut into dice-size
2 onions, peeled and chopped
3 carrots, scraped and chopped salt and pepper
1 tsp. monosodium glutamate
3 lbs. brisket of beef
6 juniper berries (available at drugstores)
½ cup chopped parsley
1 large bay leaf
½ tsp. thyme
1½ cups red wine
1 large garlic sausage (kalbasa, cooked salami, or what you can get)

With a long, sharp-pointed knife, remove core from cabbage. Cover with water. Bring to a boil. Lower heat and simmer for three minutes. Drain cabbage and chop it fine.

Put diced salt pork into a heavy pot. Cook over low heat till pieces of salt pork are almost crisp. Add cabbage, onions, and carrots. Season well with salt, pepper, and m.s.g. Place brisket on top of vegetables. Sprinkle with juniper berries, parsley, bay leaf, and thyme. Add wine. Cover tightly and cook over low heat about 2½ hours, or till meat is barely tender when pierced with a fork. Remove casing from sausage. Add sausage to pot. Continue cooking about 30 minutes longer, or till meat is completely tender and sausage is hot.

Lamb with Garlic and Olives

3½ lbs. shoulder of lamb, boned, trimmed of fat, and cut into 1-inch cubes
1 cup black olives, pitted
2 cups coarsely cut garlic, or whole cloves
⅔ cup tomato purée
1 cup parsley, chopped
1 large onion, chopped
1 tsp. basil
½ cup chopped celery leaves, or 1 tsp. dry celery leaves
½ tsp. oregano
½ cup dill, chopped
2 tsp. monosodium glutamate
2 tsp. salt
½ tsp. sugar

Mix all ingredients together, reserving half a cup of parsley. Place in a heavy pot which can be tightly covered. Place in a 350° oven for 1 hour. Reduce heat to 300°. Continue cooking 30 to 45 minutes longer, or till meat is tender. Skim off fat before serving. Sprinkle with remaining chopped parsley.

Baked Lamb and Potatoes

3½ lbs. shoulder of lamb, boned, trimmed of fat, and cut into ½-inch cubes
⅔ cup tomato purée
2 large onions, chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 tsp. basil
2 tsp. salt
pepper to taste
½ cup parsley, chopped
3 lbs. potatoes, peeled, then cut into thin matchsticks
¼ cup olive oil

Combine all ingredients except potatoes and oil. Mix well together with your hands. Place in a rather broad-surfaced casserole—preferably one which is broader at the top than at the bottom. Press mixture down firmly. Arrange potatoes evenly on top of meat. Sprinkle with oil. Place in 400° oven about 1½ hours. Occasionally, baste potatoes with meat juices from casserole. Potatoes should be very crisp when casserole is ready to eat. If this needs to be held over before serving, set oven very low and leave casserole in oven.

Mexican Pork Chile

3 Spanish sausages (Chorizos or any good garlic sausage)
3 cloves garlic, minced
3 lbs. lean pork shoulder, or unsmoked pork tenderloin, cut into 1-inch cubes
1 large onion, chopped
3 tbsp. chile powder
4 large tomatoes, peeled and chopped
1 to 1½ cups stock
salt
4 green peppers
2 avocados, thinly sliced
2 onions, cut into rings

Slice sausages about ½ inch thick. Sauté in their own fat. If fat seems in excess when they are lightly brown, discard it, but leave a little. Add minced garlic. Set aside. In a heavy pot, brown pork in its own fat. Generally, I do not find it necessary to brown meats before braising them. Pork is an exception because of its high fat content. The browning gets rid of some of the fat.

Discard any pork fat after meat has browned. Add sausage and garlic to pork. Add chopped onion and continue to sauté over medium heat till onion is soft. Stir in chile powder, then chopped tomatoes, stock, and some salt. There should be enough stock to barely cover the meat. Simmer over low heat about 1½ hours, or until meat is tender and is surrounded by a rather thickened sauce. Remove from heat.

Place green peppers over open gas flame till skin is charred and easily rubbed off. Halve peppers, remove seeds and any veins. Place skinned, halved, seeded peppers back over gas flame to char a little more and to soften slightly. Cut into strips.

Serve pork chile garnished with pepper strips, avocado slices, and onion rings.

Dutch Pea Soup

Each of these soups is a meal in itself. They are especially appropriate on a cold winter day. They taste even better after being reheated.

1½ cups dried split peas, washed and soaked overnight in cold water
1 ham shank, preferably with a little meat on it
3 or 4 beef or veal bones
2 pigs' feet, if available
2 carrots, scraped
2 stalks celery, with leaves
1 large onion
10 cups water
salt to taste
2 tsp. monosodium glutamate
white pepper to taste
croutons

After split peas have been washed and soaked overnight, drain remaining water. Place split peas in a large heavy pot. Add all ingredients except croutons. Cover pot. Cook over medium heat till almost boiling. Reduce heat so soup is just simmering.

Remove ham bone after one hour. Cut off meat. Replace bone in soup and dice ham for later use. Simmer for 2½ to three hours.

Taste for seasoning and correct if necessary. To serve, remove all bones and vegetables from soup. Cut meat off pigs' feet and place with ham. Dice carrots. Discard onion, celery, and remaining bones. Replace meat from ham and pigs' feet into soup. Add diced carrots. Serve piping hot with croutons.

Roulades Piquante

What are known as "beef birds" are generally rather dry and tasteless. Here is a French version that is delicious. The cut of beef used is all-important. If, for example, slices of round were substituted for brisket or chuck, the braised rolls would be dry and have a most undesirable texture. This is because round of beef is not sufficiently marbled with fat, and does not lend itself very readily to the braising process.

Filling

¾ lb. pork, ground
¼ lb. ham, ground
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. black pepper
½ tsp. monosodium glutamate
¼ cup parsley, chopped
½ cup shallots or scallions, chopped

Combine all the above filling ingredients. Mix well with your hands and set aside.

2 lbs. brisket or grainy chuck, sliced ¼ inch thick by the butcher
2 tbsp. olive oil
2 large onions, chopped
4 cloves garlic, minced
2 cups dry red wine
½ cup beef gravy (canned may be used)
2 tsp. tomato paste
1 tsp. monosodium glutamate
½ tsp. freshly ground pepper
¼ tsp. allspice
salt to taste
½ cup chopped parsley

Place slices of meat between two sheets of wax paper. Pound with a mallet or a bottle so that slices expand and become thinner. Spread each slice with some of the ground meat filling, making a layer slightly less than ¼ inch thick. Roll up each slice, jelly roll style, and secure with toothpicks.

In a heavy pot, heat olive oil till it is hot, but not smoking. Add onions and garlic. Sauté briefly, till soft. Add wine, beef gravy, tomato paste, m.s.g., pepper, allspice, and some salt. Boil over high heat till this sauce is reduced by about a third, or until it has a rather syrupy consistency. Turn heat very low. Place beef rolls, side by side, in sauce. There should be enough sauce so that the meat is almost covered. Cover pot tightly. Simmer over low heat for two to 2½ hours, or till beef rolls are tender when pierced with a fork. Arrange on a large, hot serving platter. Spoon sauce over meat. Sprinkle with parsley before serving. ■ load their cars with kids, food, and firewood, and drive to one of the nearby lakes for a bonfire and cookout. They combine holly and mistletoe-gathering with eating. The party is particularly great when the lake is frozen, and they can skate or slide on the ice. Then the warming-up around a bonfire is "gear" (preteen and teen-age Canadian talk for wonderful).

Many successful all-girl gatherings have scouting overtones. The girls like to congregate at one house to bake cookies, make Christmas cards, or decorate small trees that they can give to hospital wards or veterans' homes. They seem to enjoy doing things for others while calling it a party.

BOTH girls and boys at this age are beginning their craze for slumber parties. Some children outgrow them sooner than others, but both sexes at some time in their lives love to fill the living room or some such space with row on row of wiggling, giggling sleeping bags. Slumber parties are long on noise and horseplay and short on slumber, but they're considered great fun by the young. They're sure-fire party hits, if the rest of the family can take it.

As I said earlier, at all of these various preteen parties, it is de rigueur to serve lots of food. The same is true of teen-age parties, and my limited brush with the college crowd reveals the same to be true. There may be an occasional child not interested in eating, but in general the young can (and want to) consume vast quantities of food. I try to vary my party menus as much as possible, if only to keep me from getting bored, but I repeat a general pattern. I serve one hot dish that doesn't require constant attention. In my book, this rules out steak and hamburgers. I prefer spaghetti, lasagne, pizza, chili, stew, hot dogs, spare ribs, pieces of roast chicken, or a new Canadian import called "chicken in the mud." This last is a thick soup, generously stocked with noodles, vegetables, and chunks of chicken. With the hot dish I serve a salad, hot and cold drinks, and dessert. Nothing is elaborate or needs last-minute attention, but it is good and filling. Later in the party, I may put out a tray of fruit for the steady nibblers.

Happily, the same kinds of food

House Beautiful

seem to please all ages—but not so the parties. The junior-high level is a particularly frustrating age for entertaining. The girls are in favor of one type of party, the boys another. The girls admit to liking anything that includes boys, dressing up, dancing, and behaving in a rather decorous manner. The majority of boys I spoke to couldn't care less about girls, yet they agreed that boy-girl parties were okay. Given a choice, they preferred not to wear ties and jackets, and the idea of having to be supervised and act sedate took all the fun out of a party for them. The two points of view seem irreconcilable, yet there are a few kinds of social activities that manage to satisfy both extremes.

In checking with my thirteen-through-fifteen-year-old friends, they were all enthusiastic about a Hootenanny—an evening of folk music. The performers may be hired musicians or talented friends. At these affairs the girls usually wear stretch pants and blouses, the boys sweaters and slacks. Both groups will be comfortable sitting on the floor. Those who want to may dance. The rest sit around and listen and keep the beat. Food is in evidence, but there is no specific serving time. These guests prefer to serve themselves. About this point, all my informants were emphatic. The fewer adults helping, the better, they say. Some parents may be distressed by the youngsters' wanting to be left alone, but I've noticed that at a Hootenanny the freshness of the folk music brings out the best behavior in the most immature teenager, and there is little need for parental policing.

Looking for a new party twist last winter, my two sisters organized a "snowball" for their teenage youngster's dancing class. It was inspiration. Reviving the idea of the old progressive dinners that were popular in the '30's, my sisters and several other mothers started out in cars with their own twelve- and fourteen-year-olds and drove to pick up more children. They converged on the first home where soup, toasted crackers, and cider were served. They gathered up the children who lived in this home, and the party "snowballed" as they moved on to another house. A buffet dinner was ready for them here, and a few more guests joined the party. By this time the number had grown to forty or more. The last stop was the parish house, where the dance classes were usually held. The remainder of the evening was a straight holiday dance with cookies and punch, but neither the girls nor the boys were disappointed with the "snowball" because of the out-of-the-ordinary beginning. And incidentally, the burden of hosting a children's Christmas party was spread over several households.

My last suggestion for this level of revelers is a New Year's Eve party. Girls at this age are intrigued with the romance that surrounds the occasion. The boys are attracted to the noise and to being able to stay up until midnight. Since my husband and I happen to think it's a highly overrated holiday, we rarely celebrate it; we were able to supervise such a party a few years ago. Games and dancing took most of the evening, and at midnight they all ran outside to listen to the bells, whistles, and car horns from adult parties in the neighborhood, and to blow some noisemakers we had provided. It was a satisfactory teenage party, ending with my husband's and my driving the revelers home.

By the time the "children" reach high school and college, party-giving is easier but less frequent. The young adults are more comfortable with one another, but they'd just as soon not bother organizing a big affair. They prefer to get a date and meet a few friends at a show or a coffeehouse. However, if they do gather together a crowd of friends who are home for Christmas vacation, according to my informants you need a gimmick to throw a really good party. You can't get by with just asking people to drop by for drinks and stale potato chips. If they come expecting a lively time, and things are slow, these mobile young people simply get in their cars and take off. Of course, the obvious remedy for a dull party is liquor, but in our state, and in many others, it's illegal under the age of twenty-one. My husband and I are adamant about not serving alcohol to minors and then letting them drive away in cars. Our strong-minded son reinforces our stand by stating to any new acquaintances, "If you can't have fun at seventeen without drinking, you might as well be dead." So far, this attitude has clinched the argument at our house.

By far the most popular peg for a Christmas vacation party at the advanced age of sixteen-to-twenty-one is—snow. A moonlight sleigh ride in a big, hay wagon-type sleigh, ending in front of a fireplace with a pizza and a hot mug is really living. A ski-cabin house party is also hard to top. Friends in Vancouver, in Colorado, and in Vermont have established their own traditions of turning their ski lodges over to their grown-up children during the winter vacation. A few adults are on hand, but numerically speaking it's the young people's party. And it's the greatest, they tell me.

Sleighs and ski cabins are fine, if you can acquire them, but often a simple surprise party has all the ingredients you need. The fact that it is a surprise is enough to make the party fun, but any additional, unplanned humor is, of course, a delightful bonus.

For example, on his seventeenth birthday, our oldest boy was sure he'd become too adult for parties. He hadn't cared about celebrating for the previous four or five years. Since it was his last December at home before college, we decided to ignore his wishes and surprise him. We invited friends from other schools and other communities who came bearing funny gifts. Then his younger brother hit upon the idea of interviewing the guests on his tape recorder. He talked with all the extroverts and bothered the couples who much preferred to be left alone. At the end of the party he played back the tape. It is a marvelous record of his seventeenth birthday, and the taping and playback were the high spots of the party.

It is my contention that children of all ages love a party. They know what appeals to them and what suits their friends. If you want to give your youngsters a particularly happy holiday this year, ask them —whatever their ages—what kind of a party they'd like. ■

Is it true that some are better than others? Of course it is, and the better ones cost more... for good reasons. Nowhere in the world does mint grow as flavorful and fragrant as in France and the United Kingdom. So the best Crème de Menthe must be produced from these leaves, and they must be plucked at their peak and processed immediately to preserve their full flavor.

Mint leaves, tender and fragrant, are vital to a superb Crème de Menthe. But that's not all. The liqueur must be bottled as soon as possible after it is made. For this is one sure way to capture its true flavor and delicacy. One liqueur producer still takes such pains with Crème de Menthe—and 18 other delicious flavors, all made and bottled in France.
